A POPULAR FAMILY.

JENNIE: "How is it, Kate, that you always seem to 'catch on' to the best new things? Do what I may, you always seem to get ahead of me."

KATE: "I don't know; I certainly do not make any exertion in that direction."

JENNIE: "Well, during the last few months, for example, you have taken up painting, without any teacher; you came to the rescue when Miss Lathrop deserted her Delsarte class so suddenly, and certainly we are all improving in grace under your instruction; I heard you telling Tommy Eames last evening how to climb maple saplings in playing 'base ball;' you seem to be up on all the 'fads,' and now just when I'm dumfounded at your interest in physical culture exercises, come to you and get all of your information second hand in this little out-of-the-way place!—for you never go to the city."

KATE: "Why, Jennie, you will make me vain. I have only one source of information, but it is surprising how it meets all wants. I very seldom hear of anything new but what the next few days bring me full information on the subject. Magazine! No! Magazine! And a great treasure it is to us all, for it really furnishes the reading for the whole household; father has given up his magazine that he has taken for years, as he says this one gives more and better information on the subjects of the day; and mother says that it is that that makes her such a famous housekeeper. In fact, we all agree that it is the only really FAMILY magazine published, as we have sent for samples of all of them, and find that one is all for men, another all for women, and another for children only, while this one suits every one of us; so we only need to take one instead of several, and that is where the economy comes in, for it is only $3.00 a year. Perhaps you think I am lavish in my praise; but I will let you see for, or better still, send 10 cents to the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th street, New York, for a sample copy, and I shall always consider that I have done you a great favor; and may be you will be cutting it out, as you say we have the reputation of being the best informed family in town. If that be so, it is Demorest's Family Magazine that does it."

This Magazine and the Buffalo Gazette, for $2.50 for one year.

Tariff Pictures.

"The 'carpet tax' liar has been singing small lately. No wonder. Every time he shows his head a fact like this hits it. An Eighth avenue firm sells Axminster and Moquette carpets at a yard. That is less than the duty, which is 60 cents a square yard and 40 per cent. ad valorem. Carpet is generally a little more than a yard wide; but letting it go at that, the duty on these goods is at least a yard. And yet the Millses and other free trade cranks are getting ready to shout in the year 1892 the tariff is a tax.'"—New York Press.

79 cents

91 cents

1892 HAPPY NEW Year! TO EVERYBODY.

January 1st. 1892, the day on which to resolve to turn over a new leaf, and lead a better life. Let each reader of these lines to-day make for himself or herself that resolve, and resolve to keep the resolution inviolate for one year.

Let each little boy resolve to touch nothing that can intoxicate of befog for one moment his mind; to use no cigaretts, cigars or tobaco that may undermine his digestve or his nervous system: to say no words that he would be ashamed to have his dearest friends hear him say, to refrain from profanity to attend to his books and to study nature's ever open volume, to "become as wise as serpents and harmless as doves."

Let the older persons resolve that their examples in life shall be nothing but what they can conscientiously ask their youthful friends to emulate.

CLEVELAND and tariff reform is the cry of a majority of Minnesota Democrats.

LICENSING wheat speculators or grain gamblers appears to us to be in keeping with the licensing of lotteries or saloons. We do not favor the license system. If it is wrong to run a lottery, to keep a saloon, or to gamble in grain and other products, licensing will not make them right but only serves to crowd out the poorer men to the benefit of the wealthier.

THE New York Press has a picture of Cleveland surrounded with a line showing how much he had shrunk as a candidate for President. According to it he had grown considerably smaller in body but his head remained the same. Grover could afford to dispense with considerable adipose tissue and still make quite a formidable appearance as President.

ON the 21st of this month the national Democratic committee will select a place and time for holding the Democratic Convention for nominating a President and Vice President. On June 7 the Republican Convention at Minneapolis will place in Nomination a national ticket. On next November the people will, at the polls declare their choice for President and Vice President.

SOME of the dailies are busy giving interviews with prominent Democrats in Minnesota and ascribing to them the belief that the Democrats would fuse with the Alliance party on the State ticket placing Owens at the head. Last year Mr. Owens refused to accept the Democratic nomination for governor. Perhaps he will have something to say this year, also. He appears to be running on principles.

NEW YORK'S politicians are having quite lively times over who shall have a majority in their State Senate. The Senate consists of 32 members of whom 16 are Democrats and 15 Republicans the Lieutenant Governor who has no vote, is a Democrat but would not be counted as one to make a quorum. And as it requires a majority of all members to have a quorum and 16 is not a majority of all the Republicans threaten to remain away and block the wheels of legislation.

PROGRAMS are out for the Twenty fifth Annual Meeting of the Minnesota State Horticulture Society to be held at Owatanna, on January 19, 20, 21, and 22, 1892. Discussions will be had as follows. HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

In presenting the following articles to the readers of the GAZETTE, the writer while cognizant of many of the incidents therein narrated would acknowledge himself indebted to the old settlers with whom he conferred by which he not only refreshed his recollection, but received much additional information, especially concerning the years previous to when (1859) the writer came to Minnesota, amongst whom he would name James Maxwell, J. S. Harrington, D. A. Lydiard, I. A. Christlieb, E. Dickey, Earl Hoisington, John Williams, J. H. McGary, J. F. Powers, D. R. Farnham and others hereafter named. That portion of the Big Woods bordering on the North shore of Lake Minnetonka when first sought by the white man for a permanent abode, in 1853, was found to be a place well adapted to his purposes, being of a gently rolling surface, interspersed with lakes, marshes and natural meadows, and possessing a soil of unsurpassed richness, a deep vegetable loam, which supported a growth of deciduous timber, consisting of elm, sugar maple, and bird in about equal quantities, and red and bur oak, soft maple, ironwood, hickory and other varieties; of other species there were red cedars to be found on the lake shores and fine bodies of tamarack in some of the marshes or low grounds, known as tamarack swamps. The Lakes consisted of pure and clear water which they sent forth in crystalline streams, winding their way through the primaeval forest in the grandeur of nature. In the marshes and about their margins and open places in the timber were found several varieties of fruit, as low and high bush cranberries, raspberries, blackberries, gooseberries, currents, wild plums and other kinds, also a luxurient growth of grass suitable for hay. This unbroken forest with its waters was the abiding place of many living creatures: quadrupeds, birds, fishes, reptiles, common to North America excepting the most ferocious and venamous. The black bear, the elk, the deer, the raccoon, the woodchuck the rabbit, the crane the wild goose and duck, the puffed and pinnated grouse, the pigeon, the pike, the bass, the sun fish, were to be found in abundance, but the grizzly, the panther, the rattler and centipede were notably absent and the pioneer soon discovered that he could remain there without apprehension of death from either starvation or ferocious animals the scene insuring him with the idea that he had at last found the ideal home in the far West that his imagination had pictured on deciding to abandon his eastern home. In 1851 treaties were made at Traverse-de Sioux and Mendota, with the branch of the Dakota or Sioux race of Indians known as the M'dewakantonwans by which all their lands west of the Mississippi except two reservations on the upper Minnesota river, were ceded to the United States, which included all the lands about Lake Minnetonka and Crow river. In 1680 when Father Hennepin discovered the falls of St Anthony the M'dewakantonwans were living at Lake Mille Lac, and that portion of Minnesota lying between the Mississippi and Minnesota rivers was a hunting ground for another division of the Sioux race: The Tintonwans. The Indians in the Northwest at that time already and long before the encroachment of white settlements, had the one main tendency of the white man, namely: To migrate toward the setting sun. The Tintonwans kept gradually moving westward during the last two centuries, and were to be found on the plains west of the Missouri during the present century. To the terror of the emigrants to the Pacific, while the M'dewakantonwans had in the meantime removed from the Mille Lac country to the region adjacent to the falls of St Anthony and to both sides of the Minnesota river, and the Chippewa race from the great lakes during that time were also moving westand became intruders on Sioux hunting grounds. How long this process was in existance before the advent of the white man is unknown, but it seems to account for the feud and bloody warfare existing for centuries between the two great Indian races: the Sioux and Chippewas, and to have given an impression amongst early settlers, that the Lake Minnetonka region was disputed territory between those races.

Although their lands were ceded in 1851, several bands of the M'dewakantonwans remained and hunted in Henepin, Wright, Carver, McLeod, Scott, and Dakota Counties for several years after the commencement of white settlements in those counties; those bands being as follows:

That of Shakopee, whose village was a few miles east of Shakopee; that of Little Crow, whose village was south of St Paul. That of Sky Man, on Lake Calhoun and those of Good Road and Grey Iron a few miles from Fort Snelling and near the Minnesota River. These with some roving Winnebagoes and chippewas were the Indians found roaming in the Big Woods by the white man on making his first settlement there. (To be continued.)

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25, 1891.

Speaker Crisp played Santa Claus for his colleagues by announcing the committee assignments. To say that everybody is satisfied would be as great a misstatement as that made by the Republicans in saying that the dissatisfaction is great enough to cause serious dissention in the party. That there is some dissatisfaction is true, but it is little, if any, greater than that which always follows the action of a new Speaker, and unprejudiced men agree that Mr. Crisp has not shown a disposition to punish those who voted against him, to any marked extent, by putting them on obscure committees. Of course some of the gentlemen who did not get just the places they wanted will charge that the reason of it was, their opposition to Mr. Crisp's nomination in the caucus. By the time Congress assembles on the 5th of January, it is not probable that any traces of disappointment will be visible, and it was the expectation that such would be the case which caused Mr. Crisp to work night and day, although ill enough to be in bed in order to announce the committees before the Christmas adjournment.

A glance at the list of committees below will show that all sections are well represented: Elections—Forrall, (Va), Hays and Means—Springer (Ill), appropriations—Holman (Ind). Judiciary—Culbertson (Tex.), Banking and Currency—Bacon (N. Y.), Coinage Weights and Measures—Bland (Mo.). Interstate and Foreign Commerce—Mills (Tex.), Rivers and Harbors—Blanchard (La.), Merchant Marine and Fisheries—Fowler (N. J.), Agriculture—Hatch (Mo.), Foreign Affairs—Blount (Ga.), Military Affairs—Outhwaite (O.), Naval Affairs—Herbert, (Ala.), Postoffices—Henderson, (N. C.), Public Lands—McRae (Ark.), Indian Affairs—Peel, (Ark.) Territories—Washington (Tenn.), Railways and Canals—Catchings (Miss), Manufactures—Page R. I.), Mines and mining,—Cowles (N. C.), Public buildings and grounds—Bankhead (Ala.), Pacific railroads—Riley (Pa.), Levees and improvements in Mississipp river—Robinson (La.), Education—Hayes (Ia.), Private land claims—Fitch (N. Y.), Labor—Taraney (Mo.), Militia—Lane (Ill.), Patents—Tillman (S. C.), Invalid pensions, Martin (Ind.); Pensions, Wilson (Mo.); Claims, Bunn (N. C.); War Claims, Belzhoover (Pa.), District of Columbia, Hemphill (S. C.); Revision of laws, Ellis, (Ky.); Expenditures State department, Bricknel (Wis.); Expenditures War department, Montgomery (Ky.); Expenditures Navy department McClelland, (Ind.); Expenditures in Post Office department, Oates (Ala.); Expenditures Interior department Owens (O.); Expenditures Department of Justice, Allen (Miss.); Expenditures of Department of Agriculture, Edmunds (Va.); Expenditures for Public buildings, Youmans (Mich.); Library, Cummings (N. Y.); Printing, Richardson (Tenn.); Enrolled bills, Warwick (O.), Reform in the civil service, Andrew (Mass.); Election of President and Vice President, Chapman (Mich.); Census, Wilcox (Conn.); Ventilation and Acoustics, Stahlnecker (N. Y.) Alcoholic liquor traffic, Haynes (O.), Irrigation, Lanham (Tex.), Immigration and naturalization, Stump (Md.); Columbia Exposition, Durborrow (Ill.); Accounts, Rusk (Md.); Mileage, Castle (Minn.);

Membership of the Ways and Means and Appropriation Committees is considered equal to a minor chairmanship.

Following are the Democratic members exclusive of the chairmen, of those two committees. Ways and Means, McMillin (Tenn.) Turner (Ga.); Wilson (W. Va.); Montgomery (Ky.); Whiting (Mich.); Shively (Ind.); Cockran (N. Y.); Stevens (Mass.); Bryant [Neb.] Appropriations, Forney [Ala.]; Sayers [Tex.]; Breckenridge [Ky.]; Appropriations, Forney [Ala.]; Seyers [Tex.] Campton [Md.]; O'Neill [Mass.]; Livingston [Ga.].

As far as the formation of the Committees can indicate the policy of the Democratic party in the House of Representatives the outlook is most decidedly favorable to tariff reform and a marked retrenchment in public expenditures. The tariff policy is to attack the McKinley bill in detail by repealing the most obnoxious of its schedules. If the Republican Senate refuses to agree to this or the Republican President Vetoes it, should it pass the senate, the people will know where to place the blame.

Although the committee on Coinage contains nine members, including its chairman, who favor the free coinage silver against four who are opposed to it, there is no certainty that a free coinage bill will be reported from the Committee. One of the members said to your correspondent: We favor the free coinage of silver, but we shall do nothing that a majority of the party in Congress does not fully endorse.

Senator Sherman has reintroduced the Nicaragua can. $100,000,000 scheme in the Senate.

It looks now very much as if the United States would have to give Chili a scare, if it does not actually go to war with her. It is either that or a square back down, unless there is a decided change very soon.

Speaker Crisp is very ill in this City.

CORRESPONDENCE

ANNANDALE.

According to an ancient Highland superstition your correspondent here has not a year to live, he missed the lay of the week, last week, and that was the reason the Annandale items did not appear as usual.

Christmas has come and gone and we hope every body was made happy; surely we were,

We regret to be obliged to say that Dr. Ridgway has been confined to his bed several days since last Wednesday, with la grippe, Dr. O. Conner of Maple Lake has attended upon him, and at his writing he is so much better as to attend to some of his patients in the village.

Old Mr Huntington has been down with the grippe for several days and on Monday Dr. Barton was called to him Dr. Ridgway not then being able to be out. There is several cases of the grippe in our village but not of a virulent type; The family of Gideon Rudolph all being down with it except Mrs. R.

We had a Christmas tree in the M. E. Church Thursday evening which was well patronized and many young hearts went home leaping with joy, especially our pastor, Elder Higgins, who was presented with a nice fur coat of the value of $50.00. The garment was obtained by contributions solicited chiefly by Mrs. H. F McLane but assisted somewhat by Miss McKenzie of Silver Creek, where the Elder holds a weekly service. The garment was presented by Esqr. McLane with a few appropriate remarks, which were responded to by the Elder in a grateful and touching manner, especially thanking the two ladies who were instrumented in procuring it. The Elder was also the recipient of several other nice presents from personal friends.

The services at the church consisted of singing by the choir and by little girls, and by reading and recitations by Misses Viola and Sida Ponsford and Miss Maud and master Ernest Magoon

The playing at the organ by Miss Lula Towle was much complimented.

Mr. Alexander Ridgway and Martin Lowe came up from Minneapolis to spend Christmas with the doctor but unfortunately found him sick in bed

The last professional visit made by Dr. Ridgway was to Fair Haven to attend to a lady there who had badly injured one of her anklels. Dr. Munger being away from home.

Martin taught school in Middleville last winter and was so much pleased with the good people there, at least some of them, that he has been spending several of the Holidays among them(?)

A. J. Harris, Esqr. has commenced the erection of a dwelling house for his own use, on Oak Avenue, on lots bought of the late J. M. Pratt, in his life time. The masons have completed the plastering in Rennies Block and are now doing a job for John B. Dally in extension of his meat market,

ROCKFORD.

The past week was not much like the winters of a few years ago. The sun shown fourth warm Thursday giving the day the appearance of a day in early spring.

Preparations are being made everywhere for "Santa Claus." The little folks are filled with delight and expectations.

The Masonic lodge of this place will have a public installation in their hall on Tuesday evening Dec. 29.

The Public School gave an entertainment at the G. A. R. Hall, Wednesday evening, which reflected great credit on both teachers and scholars. All the pieces were well rendered. Although the roads were very rough the hall was crowded, many being obliged to stand.

The Post Office trouble is by no means over. Two petitions have been circulated for signers, one in favor of J. R. Ames and the other for M. J. Allen.

Among those who came home for Christmas are Misses Fannie Ewing, Nellie Jacobs, Rosa and Polly Ames.

Mr and Mrs. Hatch and Miss Josie Florida are spending the Holidays with relatives here.

The union Christmas tree at the G. A. R. hall Christmas eve was well attended and many nice presents given. Santa Clause appeared as usual to the delight of the young folks.

Mr. Charles O'Mera and Miss Rose Dudley were united in marriage at the home of the brides parents, near Watertown, last Wednesday, Dec. 23d, by Rev. W. J. Hobbs, of Minneapolis. May they have a long and happy journey through life.

INDEPENDENCE.

Christmas brought cold weather and snow to make good sleighing, the roads are too rough.

Christmas over and the children happy with the presents papa and mama got for them. The older people are happy too with the presents they got and are anxious to see another Christmas.

The Christmas tree at the Independence A. C. church was a very elaborate affair. There were many costly presents for young and old. O. R. Fassett, of Rockford, made a few brief and appropriate remarks before the presents were distributed. Since writing the above we have more of the beautiful snow and there is enough now to make very good sleighing.

Business with the milk men of Maple Plain and Armstrong is reported good.

Maple Plain now has five street lamps. That looks as if the village was improving.

A good many of the Nimrods are hunting rabbits, they seem to be very plenty.

The foundation for the A. C. church at Armstrong is about finished and they are hauling lumber on the ground. Stone is also being hauled for the new M. E. church.

J. D. Young, of Delano, was seen in Independence last Saturday.

Mrs. Earl Hoisington has been visiting in the city for a week.

Swan Peterson is shipping quite a lot of Maple cord wood from Armstrong.

Resolutions of Condolence

adopted by Gordon Granger Post, No. 129, Maple Plain, Grand Army of the Republic, at a regular meeting of the Post, Saturday afternoon Dec. 26, 1891, on the death of Comrade Francis McCullough's wife.

WHEREAS, Providence has seen fit in infinite wisdom to take from our midst the wife of Comrade Francis McCullough, one who was faithful and devoted in all her duties as wife and mother and by her examplary life had made many warm hearted friends.

Be it Resolved that we the members of Gordon Post No. 129, Maple Plain, tender to our Comrade Frances McCullough and his children our heartfelt sympathy in this their hour of bereavement, and affliction, and that we deeply sympathize with them in the loss they have sustained in losing a devoted wife and an affectionate mother.

Be it further Resolved that one copy of this Preamble and Resolutions be sent to Comrade Francis McCullough, one copy to Delano Eagle and one copy to Buffalo Gazette for Publication.

Apples for Export.

The merits of the American apple are doubtless exceedingly appreciated abroad, since the bulsness of exporting apples from this country to Europe, though of comparatively recent growth, is yearly becoming more important. Up to November 7, steamers from American ports had carried to the United Kingdom about 555,000 barrels of apples since the season began. Glasgow took 148,000 barrels, and London 19,778; but the most went to Liverpool. The freight to Liverpool is about 75 cents a barrel, which, with the low prices prevailing here, makes the business a profitable one to exporters. The first week of November, New-York shipped 17,140 barrels, Boston 26,842 barrels, and Montreal 41,000 barrels, a total of 18,982 barrels, against 18,250 barrels for the same week last year. The varieties sent abroad are pippins, kings, greenings, and snows.—Demorests Magazine.

A Splendid Trip.

A trip to Montana over the Great Northern is one of the most attractive in the West. From St. Paul the tourist takes the four-track route to Minneapolis. Crossing the Mississippi on a million dollar stone arch bridge, in full view of the Falls of St. Anthony and the largest flouring mills in the world, goes thence through the Park Region of Minnesota, with its myriad lakes, to the wheat valley of the Red River, to Devils Lake,—North Dakota's inland sea,—through the Mouse River country and the milk River Valley, passing Fort Assiniboine, the largest and finest military fort in the West, historic Benton, Great Falls City and the mighty cataracts of the Missouri river, then skirting the Rocky Mountains, with their sublime scenery, to Helena, the rich capital of Montana, thence over the continental backbone to Butte, the largest mining camp on earth.

AS A nation we operate forty-four per cent. of the railway mileage of the world, which is estimated at 340,625 miles. We manufacture now more pig-iron and more steel rails than any other nation, and our iron and steel industries are spreading in every direction.

IT costs about $60,000 a year to record the burning thoughts and words of the statesmen who struggle with the interest of the country in Congress, the estimates of appropriations calling for that amount to pay the salaries of stenographers of the house and Senate and the various committees.

MISS FANNY DAVENPORT has purchased 383 acres of land near Pomona, Cal., not far from the home of Mme. Modjeska. Miss Davenport intends to build a large ranch house on the property and establish game preserves and immense poultry yards there. She expects to spend $80,000 improving the land.

THE shattering of another popular belief is attempted. A number of prominent English and American lawyers in Paris declare that the marriages of American girls with foreigners turn out as well as most marriages, when the bride understands what to expect. Very likely; but there have, nevertheless, been several conspicuous instances of unhappiness.

THERE were never before so many young men in the house of representatives. The statue is the gift of the grand army.

ENGLISH newspaper methods are peculiar. About a year ago the London Telegraph published an announcement of the death of the venerable Lady de Ros, which was untrue. But the paper made a spread of its "exclusive" intelligence, and never corrected the error. The old woman actually died last Thursday, but the Telegraph entirely omits to publish this fact. It was Lady de Ros who committed the mistake a year ago in not dying then; the newspaper must be infallible.

THE news comes from Philadelphia of a great change in the manners and customs of the Quakers. The women have discarded their little black bonnets and sedate black dresses with white collars for more modern costumes, and their "thou" and "thee" of address are as unfamiliar as their old style of dress. Many of the orthodox Quakers have begun to show a preference for the Hicks doctrine. It is mainly in the south now that the Quakers follow in the footsteps of their old leaders.

THE railroad building of the year in the United States is smaller than the recent average, but does not exhibit such a bad falling off as was generally feared in the winter and spring months. The total of track laid is 4,168 miles, which is a little more than 72.6 per cent. of the 5,739 miles laid in 1890, but it is less than a third part of the 12,878 miles laid in 1887, and in only two of the last ten years has the mileage added been less than in 1891. It is also remarkable that the aggregate averages only 16.7 miles for each of the 249 lines and branches added to. The total is now about 171,000 miles.

THE Manistee district now leads all others in Michigan in the production of salt. Its output for the year ending with last month was 28 per cent. of the 3,971,000 barrels of salt inspected from the 112 "blocks" with 4,000 solar covers in Michigan, which have a maximum annual capacity of nearly 6,000,000 barrels. The manufacture of salt in the state was begun in 1860, and the total product since that time to the close of November was 56,802,410 barrels, or nearly one and a quarter per capita for the average population of the United States during the whole time the works have been in operation.

THE government printing office at Washington is supposed to be the largest printing establishment in the world. A study of the estimates of its expenses convinces one that that belief must be pretty well founded. When one reads estimates for printing inks in five thousand and ten thousand pound lots, stereotype metal in lots of one hundred thousand pounds and an equal quantity of bar-lead; twenty-five thousand pounds of glue, fifty thousand feet of imitation Russia leather, and paper to cost alone over a half million dollars, it is easy to believe that the government printing office is a great establishment.

LYNCHED.

A Mob Wreaks Vengeance on Six Members of the Notorious Sims Gang in Alabama and Mississippi.

MOBILE, Ala., Dec. 28.—The finale in the case of the notorious Bob Sims gang came Saturday when the leader and three of his partners in crime were strung up to pine trees in the woods of Choctaw county, Ala. The gang was surrounded Wednesday afternoon. After its members had committed the dastardly deed of murder and arson they took refuge in Sims' house. Sheriff Gavin, of Choctaw county, and 200 armed men soon gathered and called on Bob to surrender. He refused flatly and fire was at once opened on the house where Sims and his family and three of the Savage boys were in hiding. Sims returned the fire, which was kept up all Wednesday night and Christmas morning.

During Christmas afternoon a flag of truce was put out by the Sims boys, and Sheriff Gavin and some of his men advanced to within speaking distance of Bob. He wanted to surrender, but the conditions he made could not be granted by the sheriff, and his offer was refused. Then the posse retreated again and firing commenced once more. During the combat one of the posse was hit by a ball from the Sims' guns and killed.

At 3 o'clock Christmas afternoon Gavin was called on again by Sims, who said that for the sake of saving the lives of his wife and children he would surrender. The only guarantee he wanted was that he should be given a guard of fifty armed men who would take him to the jail in Butler, Ala. The sheriff granted this request and Sims and the Savage boys came from the house and surrendered. Sims picked out twenty-five men, whom he desired should accompany him, and the sheriff selected the other twenty-five from his posse. About 4 o'clock Christmas day the outlaws were taken into custody and the guard started with them for Butler jail, a place they were destined to never reach dead or alive.

The party had not proceeded more than a mile from the scene when a mob of citizens residing in the section where Sims has been carrying on his lawlessness organized and started after them. It was their determination to secure the gang and kill each one, and they succeeded in their plans.

On the way they overtook a man named Con Savage and as he was a great friend of Bob's and said to have been implicated in the gang's evil doings they threw a rope around his neck and hung him to a pine tree. They then proceeded on their way and soon overtook Bob and the Savages. The guard made no resistance as it would have been useless, and Bob and the three men were taken charge of by the mob. Bob and Tom Savage were placed in a buggy and a rope put around their necks and made fast to a pine tree. Bob was asked what he had to say. In reply he held out his right hand and said:

"Feel my pulse and see that I am no coward. I am willing to meet my God."

The pair was told to stand up in the buggy, and as they obeyed the horse was whipped and the pair were strangled to death. The other two Savages were treated in the same style. All the Savages protested their innocence and begged not to be killed. After the four were hung their bodies were riddled with bullets and the mob dispersed.

SHUBUTA, Miss., Dec. 28.—The lynching still goes on. Two more victims, John Sims, brother of Bob, and Mosely, nephew of Bob, were both hanged Saturday night and the avengers are in hot pursuit of a negro that was with the Sims gang the night of the massacre. They have burned Bob Sims dwelling and all houses on his place, and killed every living thing to be found on the place except the family, and they had to escape to a neighbor's house. The Sims family say they are going to leave the country. The crowd continues to enlarge and is fully 500 strong, and are hunting for Neal Sims. It is reported that Neal Sims has gotten together about forty men and intends to burn Womack Hill. The bodies of Bob Sims and the three Savages have been cut down and thrown over into the graveyard. John Savage, first hung, is still hanging.

MONTT INAUGURATED.

Chili's New President Inducted Into Office—No Attempt at Trouble by Balmacedists, as the Military Preparations Were Perfect.

VALPARAISO, Dec. 28.—At the inauguration ceremonies of Chili's new president, Admiral Jorge Montt, at Santiago Saturday, all the foreign ministers were present with exception of the United States representative, Mr. Egan. His absence caused much comment in diplomatic circles. No explanation has been given for his non-appearance. The inauguration took place in the presence of a vast and enthusiastic assemblage. Everything passed off quietly, despite the ugly rumors prevalent for some days past that the occasion would be seized upon by the Balmacedists as a favorable opportunity for an outbreak and attempt to assassinate the new chief magistrate. If any such plan had been in contemplation the imposing military display by the authorities evidently overawed its promoters.

IN THE LUMBER CAMPS.

The Maine Woodsman Leads a Happy and a Healthy Life.

Let the high-collared dudes talk as they may about the coarse fare, coarse company and coarse clothing that are common in the woods, there is a pleasure and an abandon in a lumberman's camp that can be found nowhere else in the world. In the first place a lumber camp comes the nearest to being a perfect republic of any society in the world. Living, working, eating and sleeping together for day after day and week after week, with no communication with the outside world save an occasional messenger who comes like a bit of sea-wreck to those happy Robinson Crusoes, every man comes to consider every other man his equal, and the fraternal feeling here engendered, like that of army experiences, usually extends through life. Quarrels and bitter disputes, such as are common in country and town, are almost unknown here. If one of the number happens to have an acid disposition he is ostracised by the whole camp, and allowed to meditate upon his folly until contemplation shall have cured him of his faults. Men who are addicted to coarse and brutal language become mollified and made kinder from association with those who are of finer grain, and gradually the whole life of the camp is elevated to a standard that will compare favorably with the average civilization of the state.

What a chance life in the woods is to study animals in the winter. Then the bear hides away in leaves or under wind-falls; the coon finds a hollow tree and sleeps away the cold days and nights with the resinous pine woods for a coverlid; the woodchuck curls himself up in dry knolls far below the frost and burns the fuel he has accumulated during the summer for heat; the little chipmunk takes his wife to a dry, airy earthen chamber, and there they live on beechnuts and acorns, regardless of deep snows or blustering winds, and the freckled, crawling caterpillar that fed on green leaves and herbage when it was a worm spins for himself a silken blanket and wraps his body thereon, safe away under bark and moss in a chamber more richly furnished than any king or prince that ever ruled. Meanwhile the hawks and woodpeckers and chickadees flit here and there among the limbs and trunks of trees seeking food and pleasure wherever they may be found; the beavers and muskrats build houses that will reach above the highest floods, and from barks and grass roots find palatable meals; the mink and otter and fisher cat and lynx hunt day and night for game, regardless of laws or game wardens, and moose and deer and caribou dig in the snow for grass, eat moss from pendant limbs, or browse greedily upon twigs and evergreens. And whatever mammal or bird does the woodsman knows it. There is no fooling him. Men may pay short visits to the woods, catch brief glimpses of the scenery and go home and write books and books upon the habits of plants and animals, but the lumberman knows more than books and more than bookmakers. The life and habits of those who surround him are his books. In these he studies day and night, and yet so great is the lesson that though he apply himself for years the whole is never learned.

Another blessing of wood life is that sickness and poor appetites are practically unknown there. The food is not dainty, but it is clean and well cooked, and the exercise of the work, coupled with the climate and air, gives a sharp appetite, which in turn brings good digestion, sound sleep and health. It would be far better than drugs and doctors' medicine for hundreds of the sickly, dyspeptic clerks in big cities, if they were to drop pencil and yard stick and betake themselves to the woods of Maine for one winter and live on pork and beans and bread and molasses, drinking their scalding tea from tin dippers and get up a circulation by exercise, and leading a regular life.—Bangor News.

NO TIME TO SHAVE.

Men Can Spare Hours for All Sorts of Idleness, but the Barber Must Rush.

"Shave me just as quick as you can," said the man as he hustled into the barber's chair. "I am in a great hurry."

The barber performed his office in the silence that marks the excellent workman, but whether direction spurred him is a matter of doubt. When he had finished, tipped his customer out of the chair, and was tucking the towel about the neck of his next patron, he broke the silence and inquired:

"Did you hear that man tell me to hurry?"

"Yes. Why?"

"Because I have known him about ten years, and he is always in a great hurry in the barber shop. He drinks a good deal, but he is never in a hurry at the saloon. He will go from here straight to Toper's tavern on Dearborn street, and he won't go out of there for an hour. He will not do any business, and he knows it before he goes. He will simply loaf there till he can find no further excuse possible, and then he will go to his office. He will spend three hours and as many dollars in the saloons every day, and he will grieve and fuss and hurry up everybody when it comes to shaving.

"Men always have time to sit at their desks doing nothing; they are never in too much of a hurry at the club; they have time enough to stand for an hour any day on the street and look at women; they can lose time in bed and at breakfast, but when they come to the barber shop they are in frantic haste. Yet, if a hurrying barber happens to scratch them they get him discharged. A well-shaved man is respectable, no matter what clothes he has on. One who needs shaving looks disreputable, I don't care what he wears.

"When a thing amounts to that much if I didn't have time to shave decent I wouldn't shave at all."

Then the barber moistened the ball of his thumb and tried the edge of his scimetar, snatched a bit of paper from the shelf, and relapsed into silent industry.—Chicago Herald.

Reasonable Progress.

Detective (to Chief)—Somebody has killed a woman and two children in a house on Mulberry street.

Chief—Have you any clue to the murderer?

Detective—No; but I have the house located all right.—Puck.

Not that Kind of an Expert.

Dr. Emdee—My man, you are sadly in need of change.

Hardup—Yes; but I called you as a medical, not as a financial expert.—Jury.

The January Wide Awake.

Of especial interest will be found Sallie Joy White's description of the new Leland Stanford, Jr., University in California—that tender and magnificent memorial by Senator and Mrs. Leland Stanford. Mrs. White calls the article "The Boy who built a College," and although the great school is built as a memorial it was still so clearly the fruit of the dead boy's desires that the title is no misnomer. Molly Elliot Seawell has a delightful characteristic tale of school-boy life, "Two Schoolmasters," and Miss Adam's "Double Christmas at St. Martin's," is a good story of boarding-school life. The serial stories of "Jack Brereton's Three Months' Service," and "The Lance of Kanana," a striking Arabian story by Abd el Ardavan," already grow absorbing even in their second installment. The American pale-face woman who was adopted by the Seneca Indians, Harriet Maxwell-Converse, has another interesting sketch of Seneca life in "The Strawberry Feast at the Long House;" Zitella Cocke tells a charming story of the celebrated Mexican general Santa Anna and his jealous pet bird; and Otis T. Mason has something to say of Professor Marsh's giant lizards, sixty feet long. The poems in the number are by Celia Thaxter and Clara Doty Bates. Other verses and sketches fill out a most interesting number of WIDE AWAKE, which is, as usual, well illustrated and so carefully made up as to prepare a tempting feast indeed for the myriad young people who eagerly await and as eagerly welcome it.

WIDE AWAKE is published at 20 cents per number, $2.40 per year. All booksellers keep it.

YOUR friend may be the soul of hospitality, but he is not apt to forget that it is your treat.—Galveston News.

It's an insult to your intelligence, but some unscrupulous dealers try it. For instance: you're suffering from some Skin, Scalp or Scrofulous affection, or are feeling "run-down" and "used-up." There's a torpid liver, impure blood, and all that may come from it. You've decided, wisely, that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is the medicine to help you. You know that it's guaranteed to do so, as no other blood-purifier is.

If it doesn't benefit or cure, you get your money back

But what is best for you to take isn't always best for the dealer to sell. He offers something else that's "just as good." Is it likely? If the makers of a medicine can't trust it, can you?

One of two things has to happen. You're cured of Catarrh, or you're paid $500 cash. That's what is promised by the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. By its mild, soothing, cleansing, and healing properties, it cures the worst cases.

"August Flower"

What Is It For?

This is the query perpetually on your little boy's lips. And he is no worse than the bigger, older, balder-headed boys. Life is an interrogation point. "What is it for?" we continually cry from the cradle to the grave. So with this little introductory sermon we turn and ask: "What is AUGUST FLOWER FOR?" As easily answered as asked: It is for Dyspepsia. It is a special remedy for the Stomach and Liver. Nothing more than this; but this brimful. We believe August Flower cures Dyspepsia. We know it will. We have reasons for knowing it. Twenty years ago it started in a small country town. To-day it has an honored place in every city and country store, possesses one of the largest manufacturing plants in the country and sells everywhere. Why is this? The reason is as simple as a child's thought. It is honest, does one thing, and does it right along—it cures Dyspepsia.

SMITHY SONG

When I am half a-dreaming,
And only half asleep,
When daylight's grayest gleaming
Glits through the blinds to peep,
Oh, then I hear the dinging
Of the smithy hammers ringing,
Ching ching, ching, ching,
Ching ching, ching ching.

At eve when I'm returning
From labors of the day,
Their forges yet are burning,
And still their hammers play;
And oft the smiths are singing
To that measured, merry ringing,
Ching, ching, ching, ching,
Ching, ching, ching ching.

Often with rhythmic bending
Of bodies to and fro,
They toil in couples, sending
The sparks out, blow on blow;
One hammer always swinging
The while the other's ringing,
Ching ching, ching ching,
Ching ching, ching ching.

O merry anvils sounding
All day till set of sun!
It is by steady pounding
That noblest tasks are done.
By sturdy blows and swinging
That keep the world a-ringing,
Ching ching, ching ching,
Ching ching, ching ching.

TWO MOUNTAIN LIONS.

Their Magnificent Courage When Brought to Bay.

They Fight to the Death with a Pack of Bloodhounds, Backed by Armed Hunters, and Bravely Meet Their Doom.

There had been great excitement among the ranchmen of the valley of the Sierra Madre for some weeks over the depredations committed upon their flocks of sheep and herds of cattle by some beast of prey. What this robber was no one could say with any exactness, for, uniting an extraordinary degree of cunning with great speed of foot, the rogue invariably managed to elude all pursuit. Morning after morning some herder would report a cow, calf or sheep done to death with a cruel wound in its throat from which the assassin had drained its warm life's blood. But the dead carcass was all that remained to tell the story of the coming and going of the spoiler, for no shadow left less trace of its presence.

This enemy of their herds was all the more feared by the cattlemen, as there was no guessing where the next victim was to be found, for with incredible rapidity of movement the animal seemed to scour the country for miles in every direction, seeking with all the fastidiousness of a true epicure the tenderest lambs and choicest brand of cattle. The herds themselves seemed to know that some foe lurked near, and at night would huddle together as if for mutual protection.

At last matters reached a climax when the fine imported Durham cow, "with a long pedigree," of one of the wealthy stock-owners of the vicinity strayed away from her comfortable stall, and, with the curiosity of her sex, was investigating the country, when she was set upon by the mysterious beast of prey. She was found literally torn to pieces, and it was evident that the cow, a young one, had endeavored to make some fight for her life, for her horns were stained with blood, and a trail of blood leading to a small thicket close at hand indicated that the animal that had killed her had not escaped without a wound.

It had been believed from the first that the depredator had made its descent from the mountains, to which it would return after each orgy, and, on bloodhounds being sent for and placed on the trail, the dogs led at once toward the rugged peaks that frown down on this fair valley. The blood-stains ceased with the thicket, so it was concluded that the animal had not been very severely wounded, and no further traces of its passage were visible in the open country, though the dogs showed no hesitation on the trail. The hunting party numbered nearly a dozen and was composed of local Nimrods, who scented fine sport on the occasion, and stockmen, each of whom had the loss of one or more fine blooded sheep or cows to avenge.

After some ten or twelve miles of steady travel, facing the chill mountain that frosted the air and spurred the wiry little Mexican ponies into a brisk trot, the party reached the little station of Rio Namiquipa, where the dogs paused. Here they seemed puzzled at some sudden turn the trail had taken, for they ran here and there for some minutes, finally breaking away up the river. But after a run of a hundred feet or so the old Chihuahua hound Miguel made a stand, and then, with a warning cry to his mates, turned and sped back to where the hunters waited. The pack followed him, though with some hesitation, until, pressing him close as he went leaping from one to the other of the stepping stones that crossed the stream, they seemed all at once to understand his maneuvers and leaped forward up the shelving bank with a joyful cry of certainty. Old Miguel's master, an aged Mexican, by name Leander, explained that the dogs had here struck the trail of some other animal that had come down the river to drink at that spot. He had, he thought, joined the one they sought, and the two had struck out together for the mountains. With renewed interest the hunters walked their horses across the shallow stream and followed the dogs, which were now only dark specks on the golden sands that washed the foot of the grim and mighty Sierra.

The dogs were observed after awhile to gather about a clump of cactus plants that marked the first rise of the mountains proper, then to go on and finally disappear behind a mass of fallen bowlders. At this the party urged on their ponies, as it was evident that the game was near at hand. Old Leander at the clump of cacus dismounted, and after a brief examination of the disturbed sand declared at this place the wounded animal had lain down to rest, while the other, probably its mate, had stood by. As the hunters paused here the loud barking of the dogs was heard at some little distance, so clapping spurs to the ponies the party went forward at a gallop.

The hounds were found to have gathered about a small heap of earth and stones, on which stood an enormous mountain lion defying them with blazing eyes and waving tufted tail. He was a magnificent male, with tawny skin marked with velvety black, a bearing as full of pride as any monarch of Arabian desert, and a roar that woke the echoes in the mountain gorges far above his defiant head. The yellow smoothness of his side was broken by a jagged wound outlined in dark clotted blood, but his courage was undaunted by the yelping pack of dogs that surrounded him, making false starts at him, yet afraid to attack him.

Of his mate nothing was to be seen The hunters, each anxious to claim the lion as his trophy, pressed forward and, aiming over the surging mass of hounds, fired upon the majestic creature facing death so resolutely. Wounded in half a dozen places, the lion sprung into the air with a scream of agony and rage, then fell, to be instantly covered by the dogs, barking in triumph over a defeated foe. But they had flattered themselves too soon that the prey was theirs, for with a desperate courage the lion struck out right and left, sending his enemies heels over head with blows of his powerful paws and ripping and tearing with his unsheathed claws and giant molars. Their red blood mingled with his own and dyed the sand crimson, and they gave back for an instant, until, seeing that the mountain king was dying even as he fought, they returned to the battle.

But as they fell upon him a roar from the frowning heights of the mountains proclaimed that another foe was at hand. The mate was returning and had scented the battle from afar. In another moment she leaped into view, pausing on the pinnacle of a tall spire of rock and surveying the scene below with an angry cant of her sleek, cat-like head. Outlined against the tender blue of the morning sky she seemed a yellow carving of yellow marble, but only for a brief moment, for as her topaz eyes caught sight of her dead mate and the frantic dogs, she sprung down to the crag next beneath her, just as a volley of shots shattered the extreme end of the one she had that instant left. She descended with magnificent bounds that sent her lithe body from peak to peak with incredible rapidity, paying not the slightest apparent attention to the dogs or the hunters and seeming only to see the fallen monarch below. She reached the little gorge where he lay. A second volley had failed to stay her as she came bounding down, but now a third greeted her as she sprung from the last spur of rock, and a gush of crimson blood marked where some bullet had found a home in her quivering flank.

Then for the first time she seemed to notice her human foes, and leaping to the side of her dead mate faced them with a roar of defiance, even as she bent her head and licked the bloody carcass at her feet. The dogs, taking this for a sign of timidity, flew at her ferociously, but the lioness, rendered furious and reckless by her mate's death, met this attack with a savage determination that sent several away yelping, wounded severely, and stretched others dead, while all hesitated to continue the fight.

Turning once more to her dead companion she bestowed one loving caress on his stiffened form and then faced the mountain, and would have sprung away had not the hunters, who had feared to fire upon her before lest they wound the dogs instead, here succeeded in breaking one of her shoulders by a single shot out of a score. She fell forward with a cry and rolled over on the yellow sands that drank her blood. Once more the dogs attacked her, and though she fought like a fury with tooth and nail they mastered her.

Again and again she endeavored to right herself, only to fall forward on the broken bone, while her determined foes tore at her limbs and sought her slender throat. The hunters endeavored to call off the frantic hounds, but they could not be induced to leave their prey, to which they clung until the beautiful wild creature lay dead and mangled beside her mate.—Galena (Mex.) Cor. of Philadelphia Times.

SWINDLING IS UNIVERSAL.

But It Generally Gets Its Compensation in Its Own Coin.

Each season has its peculiar swindles too numerous to mention. In summer the iceman, who is very far from being a nice man, reaps his little harvest. The iceman's bills, even in July or August, may be called a cold deal. In winter the plumber challenges our admiration. Strict, honest and square dealing is not obtained even in the administration of justice. A colored gentleman who adhered too closely to a valuable dog, on which he had not even a mortgage or builder's lien, got two years at Sing Sing, while the average boodle alderman gets a new trial, or an acquittal. The man who steals a dollar is called a thief, while the man who feloniously absorbs a million is called a brilliant financier; and so he is, but he is simultaneously a thief, all the same. However, there are compensations. For instance, the alderman who boodles, in turn is severely boodled by the legal gentlemen who attended to his (the boodler's) vindication. The merchant who fines his clerks, and otherwise robs them, is victimized by the fashionable female kleptomaniac, who has such taking ways. The American exile in Canada has to pay a quarter for a drink of whisky. The wealthy coal dealer or the Wall-street broker inadvertently visits a church fair, and when he comes out he feels as bad as if he had been interviewed by the Pullman car porter. As a boodler, he is the boss. Of all the boodlers he does the biggest business on the smallest capital.—Texas Siftings.

Fun for the Bull.

Up on a gentleman's place in the Catskills is a young Jersey bull, as full of vim and energy as a steam engine. One day some painters, who were painting a cottage on the place, had occasion to pass through the pasture where the bull was grazing. One of the painters carried a pot of red paint, the other a pot of yellow. The bull immediately prepared for business. After a preliminary bellow, he charged the man with the red paint-pot and drove him up a tree. Next he gave chase to the painter with the yellow paint-pot, and tossed him over the fence. Then he amused himself with the paint-pots, tossing them up in the air, until, from being a cream-colored bull, he became a red-and-yellow one. After he had thus decorated himself he pranced around the painter in the tree, and kept up this amusement until the head farmer came and whacked him into the barn with a blacksnake whip. The bull was then chained and washed down with spirits of turpentine to get off the paint. This caused him to bellow and roar in a frightful manner, and the painters, who were looking on, seemed to think they were avenged.—Golden Days.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—The late Gen. Crook was a first-rate marksman. An officer who served under him on the plains tells that he once saw him kill six pin-tailed grouse with seven shots of his rifle, and all of the grouse but one were shot in the head or neck. The general always took good care of his rifle.

—The "power behind the throne" of the czar of Russia, by which the czar is largely controled, is embodied in that singular man, Pobiedonostseff, the procurator of the holy synod of the Russian church. This astute functionary has acquired a great ascendency over the mind of Alexander III.

—Canon Ainger, the biographer and ardent admirer of Charles Lamb, says that what is called American humor is not humor at all, but a kind of debased wit. He believes that it is the humanity in humor that marks it as true—that there must be real reverance for certain ideals in the humorist's mind.

—Miss Betham-Edwards, the English novelist, is credited with strong and unusual opinions upon several subjects. She does not eat meat, is an advocate of cremation, thinks "The Scarlet Letter" the finest novel of the century and dislikes Ibsen and Tolstoi. She is a cousin of Miss Amelia B. Edwards, the Egyptologist.

—An English newspaper notes an instance at Southampton when an American, just arriving, offered to give upan American reprint of "Eric Brighteyes," by Rider Haggard. The matter was brought to the attention of two customs inspectors, both of whom declared that Haggard was not an English author. The traveler was consequently allowed to keep his "Eric Brighteyes."

—John Strange Winter began to write a story called "Justice" before Herbert Spencer's fourth part of the Principles of Ethics appeared with the title of "Justice." The lady thought that she must, therefore, change the name of her book; but Mr. Spencer, when the situation was described to him, said it would be perfectly satisfactory if the novel was called "Justice—A Story."

—A few years ago a young man became clerk in a railroad office for the late ex-Congressman William L. Scott, of Erie. He was faithful in a few things and has now been made manager over much. In his will Mr. Scott leaves an estate of about $20,000,000, and he appoints this former humble clerk to take general charge of the immense fortune, with a salary of $50,000 a year.

—A curious new periodical is announced in England. This is an English-Arabic monthly, which proposes to "make the east and west better known to each other by means of a paper that shall be read by both." It is to be called the Eastern and Western Review, and will be printed in London, partly in English and Arabic. It is said that influential support has been promised from Constantinople and Cairo.

—Three sisters named Klumpke, natives of California, but students abroad for some years, have won unusually brilliant reputations in Paris within the past few years. The eldest studied medicine in Germany and Paris with distinguished success, and was the first woman to be admitted as house-surgeon in a Paris hospital. She is now continuing her excellent work, though married to a famous French physician. The second sister is an artist, a pupil of Julien, exhibits every year in the Salon, and has medals and honorable mention from the best societies. While the third sister, Miss Dorothea, excels in mathematical studies, and has given especially valuable aid to astronomical savants.

HUMOROUS.

—Anybody can walk into the parlor, but it takes nerve to walk into the spider.—Texas Siftings.

—Of all sad words of tongue or pen,
Which through my weak mind flit,
None are so sad, to me, I think,
As these two—"Please remit."
—The Club.

—"Did you run for office the other day?" asked Spiggins of a defeated candidate. "No," said the candidate sadly, "I walked. The other fellow ran."—Somerville Journal.

—"I take an abstract view of things," loftily said the philosopher. "So do I," remarked the sneak thief, as he walked off with the philosopher's watch.—Baltimore American.

—Mother—"George, dear, I wish you would not go fishing with Harry Slocum. He is just getting over his measeles." George—"That's all right, mother; there won't be any danger. I never catch anything when I'm fishing."

—"I've just mortgaged my house for five thousand dollars," said a New Yorker to his broker friend. "Can you give me a pointer on something that's a purchase?" "I can," replied the broker; "buy that mortgage on your house."—Harper's Bazar.

—A Knight Errant's Etiquette.—Weary Watkins—"How would you like to be rich?" Hungry Higgins—"Rich! How would I like to be rich? Jest think of pie three times a day and a solid gold knife to shove it in with! Ah!—Indianapolis Journal.

—Quite Delicate.—Mrs. Gabb (hostess)—"Your little son does not appear to have much appetite." Mrs. Gadd—"No, he is quite delicate." Mrs. Gabb—"Can't you think of anything you would like, my little man?" Little Man—"No'm. You see, mom made me eat a hull lot before we started, so I wouldn't make a pig of myself."—Demorest's Magazine.

—For Charitable Purposes.—Mrs. Blank—"I am sorry to say that I can't afford to contribute anything to that charity, I really haven't a cent with me." Collector—"That's precisely what Miss Sharp said you'd do." Mrs. Blank—"What! That cross-eyed old maid? How much did she give?" Collector—"Five dollars." Mrs. Blank—"Here's ten."—Yankee Blade.

—An old bachelor recently gave utterance to the following jeu d'esprit. He was introduced to a beautiful widow, of the same name as himself. The introduction was in this wise: "Mr. Evans, permit me to introduce you to Mrs. Evans." "Mrs. Evans!" exclaimed the spirited bachelor; "the very lady I have been in search of for the last forty years!"—Once a Week.

—A certain well-known man of letters received from a friend of much ambition, but small literary talent, a volume of portentious length, which he was requested to read and criticise for its author's benefit. For a moment the recipient of the ponderous tome was staggered by the weight of the burden laid upon him; then a happy inspiration seized him, and, snatching up his pen, he addressed to his tormentor the following note: "Dear X., I have received your book, and shall lose no time in reading it.—Once a Week.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Make your own celery salt. Grate dried celery root, and mix with it one-fourth its quantity of fine table salt.

—To remove ink stains from wood, use strong muriatic acid, rubbed in with a cloth; afterward wash off well with water.

—Good Mucilage: It is said this mucilage will keep good in the warmest weather; it will also stick on tin or glass. Gum arabic, six troy ounces; glycerine, four fluid ounces; water eight fluid ounces.—Home.

—Grandma's Gingerbread: Two cups of sugar, five cups of sifted flour, one cup of butter, one cup of milk, two teaspoonfuls ginger, one teaspoonful soda. Mix in the flour one dessert-spoonful cream of tartar.—Detroit Free Press.

—To Remove Finger Marks upon Doors: Dissolve sal-soda, one ounce, into one pint of soft water and go over the soiled doors or other painted woodwork with it, using a sponge or cloth, following with a wiping-cloth slightly wrung out of hot, clean water.—Christian Inquirer.

—Crewel or stem-stitch embroideries carried out in softly-tinted silks on a white ground are delicate and effective. A pretty example is in pale-green and pale-pink silks scattered over a white silk ground. A length of silk combined with olive or chestnut plush drapes an easel very satisfactorily.—N. Y. World.

—To Renovate Old Silk Dresses: A writer says: "A most satisfactory way to renovate old silks is to boil an old kid glove in one pint of soft water until the glove shrinks to the size of a four-year-old child's hand; the liquor will be glutinous when cold, having brushed out every particle of dust, sponge the silk thoroughly and smooth with a hot iron upon the wrong side.—Christian Inquirer.

—A simple cream, very nice for a sensitive skin, consists of equal parts of lanoline and glycerine. Put two ounces of each in a small tin can and stand it in a warm oven till the lanoline is entirely melted. Then add a few drops of attar of roses, rose-water or lavender and stir the whole briskly while cooling, otherwise the lanoline and glycerine will separate. This is very softening and agreeable to the skin.—N. Y. World.

—Salsify Oysters: Boil eight large roots of salsify perfectly tender; peel carefully, crown and all; rub through a sieve, and season with salt, pepper and three ounces of butter; add a gill of flour, two well-beaten eggs and a little rich cream, but the mixture must be a very thick batter; have a frying pan half full of boiling lard and drop the salsify in, one large spoonful at a time, just about the size of a large oyster; when brown turn, and remove as soon as done; drain carefully and serve at once in a hot dish.

WINTER FROCKS FOR GIRLS.

Tasty Costumes for House and Outdoor Wear.

New designs for girls' winter frocks are of warm woolen stuffs—cashmere, camel's-hair, cloth and the fleecy, rough-finished fabrics.

A house dress fashioned like a Watteau wrapper is worn in the morning by girls of six to ten years. Cashmere, crepon or flannel is the material, with waist lining of sateen. For a girl of six years two breadths and a half of material (cashmere width) are gathered to a round collar-like yoke fitted by shoulder seams. The straight sleeves half a yard wide are gathered at the top and to a wristband. Velvet ribbon two inches wide is set in a point in the back just below the yoke, then drawn down to the front and fastened under a rosette. To complete this pretty dress, a wide round collar and cuffs of nainsook are worn. They are doubled of the material, and edged with a frill two inches wide that may be hem-stitched.

A comfortable cloak for girls of four to eight years is of ladies' cloth warmly lined, with fur trimming, tan, cadet blue, or reseda green-cloth trimmed with brown mink or beaver, or else with the fleecy Mongolian fur—white, black or colored—to match the cloth. The yoke is shallow and pointed, the high collar is a straight band covered with fur, and full bishops' sleeves fall on deep cuffs edged with fur. Braces of the cloth cross in the back below the yoke, and lap in front at the waist line. The soft-crowned Florentine cap is bordered with fur, and has a pompon of ostrich feathers with an aigrette in the center.

School frocks of cashmere, vigogne, or of plaid wool for girls of eight to fourteen years have a widely-belted waist invisibly hooked under the front gathers, and a full-gathered skirt. The waist is gathered below the throat, and under the belt in front and back. The skirt of three breadths of double-width goods (for girls of twelve years) is gathered to the waist permanently. A separate belt, reaching almost to the armpits in corselet fashion, is well lined and may be whaleboned, and is nearly covered with rows of black soutache; it is laced in front through eyelet holes. The sleeves are shirred to a ruffle at the wrist, and rows of braid are set on the shirring. The turned-over collar is also trimmed with braid.

A lovely little frock for parties or dancing-school for girls of six to twelve years is of wash silk, pink, mauve or blue, with white stripes. The low full corsage is belted with velvet of darker shade than the ground of the silk, or else with black, and is trimmed with a very full frill of white lace or of chiffon with scalloped edge. It is worn over a guimpe of white crepe de Chine gathered at neck and wrists without trimming. The striped elbow sleeves are also untrimmed, being simply corded. The ribbon velvet bow on the hair matches the belt in color.—Harper's Bazar.

Turker Scallop.

Take a quantity of cold turkey and chop fine; put a layer of bread crumbs in the bottom of a buttered dish, and moisten with a little milk; then add a layer of turkey with bits of the dressing and small pieces of the butter on top, sprinkle with pepper and salt; then another layer of bread crumbs, and so on till the dish is nearly full; add a little boiling water to the gravy left over, and pour it on the turkey; then for a top layer crust, beat two eggs, two tablespoonfuls of milk, one of melted butter, a little salt, and cracker crumbs sufficient to make thick enough to spread on with a knife; put bits of butter over and bake three-quarters of an hour, with a tin-plate over it; about ten minutes before serving, remove the plate and brown slightly; chicken is also served in this style.—St. Louis Republic.

ONE IN A THOUSAND.

How a Clerk Made His Fortune by Studying the Stock Market.

"I know," said the broker, "a man who ten years ago was a clerk earning by hard work in a mercantile house, $1,800 a year. He had been earning this salary or less for a good many years and saw no prospect of any advancement that would amount to much. He had saved up about $2,000, but this was too small an amount to start him in any business. He looked about him, and, being anxious to make money, his attention was naturally directed to Wall street. Here he saw great possibilities and commenced to study the stock market.

Every evening found him at the Brooklyn Library reading the financial papers. What he was after was not so much figures as first principles. When he had gotten a good idea of these he familiarized himself with the condition of some of the principal railroads in the country, trying to discover what were the real, actual, non-speculative values of their stocks. After he had applied himself this way for something more than a year he resigned his position and told his employer that if he couldn't make five thousand dollars a year on Wall street he would go West on a ranch. The first thing he did was to take a long railroad trip, with the idea of learning the condition of the different roads and to get some knowledge of the country through which they ran. Then he came back and commenced to hang around a broker's office right here in Brooklyn. After familiarizing himself with the ticker and noticing the fluctuations of the securities of the roads he had made his specialties he bought his first one hundred shares, putting up one thousand dollars of his principal as margin. The next day it had advanced one point, and he sold. Counting out his commission, he made seventy-five dollars. That has been his policy ever since, buying on a little reaction and selling on a little rally. He has always been satisfied with half a point rise; indeed, he has preferred this if he could sell at that profit on the same day he bought. So he went on. At the end of the first year, living very economically, he had increased his capital from two thousand dollars to more than seven thousand dollars. Sometimes he has been more venturesome. His study of reports, statistics and personal examination of the roads has given him an extraordinary knowledge of the value of certain stocks. Whenever the market has brought the prices of these securities lower than what he considered the actual values he has always bought boldly and has made some good coups, but he has always been satisfied to sell when the market reached the real values again.—Buffalo Express.

TRUE BENEVOLENCE.

It Consists Not in Idle Words But in Helpful Deeds.

No sacrifice is made by the man who parts with his gold only when death releases his grasp upon it; no real charity is expressed by him when he provides by will that it shall be employed to help the unworthy who do nothing to help themselves. It is the common saying of the unthinking that if they had large means they would do great things in the way of helping the poor and needy, yet it may be doubted whether they would do anything of the kind unless they are already engaged in some such work. The man is poor indeed who can not in some way help his neighbor, if only by words of sympathy, and unless he has the disposition to do this when he is poor there is little likelihood that the possession of riches will transform his nature. Some of the most beautiful and touching examples of true benevolence are to be found among the very lowly; the poor who divide their last crust of bread with their neighbor, who care for their sick friend by personal sacrifices, or who unite to do the last kindly offices to one whom they have loved. Charles Dicken, whose proneness to caricature or exaggeration mars some of his best work, has nevertheless drawn beautiful pictures of this kindly disposition resident in those who themselves are fit subjects for charitable consideration. The thought that should be kept in mind is that large means are not necessary to the development and exercise of benevolent feelings, and that money may be misused in ostensible charities unless it is employed both intelligently and sympathetically for the relief of those who are in need. In many organized charities the elements needed to their proper development are provided by the combination of contributors of means and managers of benevolent impulses, who make wise use of the money contributed. The latter are not to be discredited because they do not themselves contribute, for very often the work they do is more than equivalent to the money a generous but careless and unthinking patron put into their hands. Blessed is the man who has the intelligence, the sympathy and the money with which he may wisely promote benevolent enterprises; only less blessed is he who has the desire and purpose to help his fellow-man, though his means may be limited.—Detroit Free Press.

An Apology.

A parish clerk apologized to a church dignitary who had been summoned to take a service at a small village church: "I am sorry, sir, to have brought such a gentleman as you to this poor little place. A worse gentleman would have done if we had only known where to find him."—London Light.

Apples Better Than Whips.

One evening the driver of a Third avenue street car, bound up-town with a heavy load of passengers, stopped his horses just before reaching Grand street, hitched the lines tight, and ran over to a fruit stand on the curb and bought a couple of rosy apples. Returning to his horses he gave each of them an apple, which the animals munched with great apparent relish. Then jumping on the platform he shook the lines loose, and the horses started off in a way that made the standing passengers grip the straps convulsively. To a passenger on the front platform the driver said that as a matter of fact and not sentiment one apple was worth more than all the whips in New York in getting satisfactory work from the horses. "I never use a whip on any horse," he said. "I drive six horses a day and give each one an apple, and they seem to look forward to the treat. The scheme cures balky and obstinate horses, and livens up lazy or tired horses wonderfully." And the way the horses covered the ground and did their work generally seemed to bear out this theory. They made up for the time lost by the stop in less than three blocks, and kept on up-town like a fresh team.—N. Y. Sun.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Remarkably Clean!"

A Republican exchange has the effrontery to speak of the Fifty-first Congress as having left a "remarkably clean record." There is no denying that Congress was "remarkable," but as for its having been "clean," or having left a "clean record," let us see.

It was "remarkable," because during its session, for the first time in the history of this government, the speaker declared that the House was not a delberative body.

Because during its session the Speaker counted as voting those who had not voted snd forced a desenting minority into participating in the passage of measures which they felt would be ruinous to the country.

Because Speaker Reed counted as present not only those who were in sight in the chamber, but those who were out of sight in the cloak rooms. Because it was the only Congress which was ever slapped in the face by having every one of the members it unseated returned to Congress by the people at the election following their unseating.

Because the people of the United States never so decidedly voted utter lack of confidence in any other Congress.

Because only one of the Admin istration party was returned to the present House.

Because no other Congress squandered a $100,000,000 cash surplus, and bankrupted the National Treasury though it had to spend over a thousand million dollars to do it.

As to the record of the Fifty-first Congress having been a "clean" one, look at the following list of fourteen notorious scandals with which it stands deservedly charged:

1st. Selling "protection" and excessive profits to monopolists for money used to run a presidential campaign and elect a protectionist President.

2nd. Rewarding the raiser of a corruption fund with a position in the cabinet.

3rd. Expending the money thus procured in the open purchase of votes.

4th. Utterdisregard of civil service reform pledges, and a galaxy of disreputable performances for discreditable party service.

5th. Shameful administration of the great pension sharks.

6th. The President of the U. S. as a gift taker and tool of real estate boomers.

7th. Stealing the representation in the United States Senate of a new State.

8th. Evicting Democratic members of the House of Represenitive to retain partisan control

9th. Usurpation of power by a Speaker to insure the passage of partisan measures.

10th. Disgraceful scenes and gross vulgarity in the House, the direct result of the Speaker's despotic and unlawful action.

11th. Making fraudulent census for partisan advantage through a reapportionment of congressional representation.

12th. Governmen officials looting public lands regardless of a very mild rebuke from the Interior Department.

13th. The appointment of a notorious political corruptionist, identified with all the great scandals of the party during late years, to be Secretary of War.

14th. Squandering the money of an overtaxed people to get rid of a troublesome surplus.

That is the "remarkable" and "clean" record of its party to which the organ points with pride. But the people evidently did not share that feeling.

Their opinion of the Fifty-first Congress, "clean record" is expressed in the figures which show that they improved the first opportunity to reduce the Republicans in the house from 176 to 87.-- Minneapolis Times

ROCKFORD, Dec, 19, 1891.

MR. EDITOR:—Among the many things that often come to us in this life are the memories of the past, as I read these words spoken so long ago by Mr. John B. Gough, I could in imagination see him, as he held the glass in his hand, and the influence on his audience as with his powerful words and gestures he proclaimed the words I enclose for you to publish. Often, in years gone by have I heard him lecture. Many live who are saved from the iron hand of rum by his influence and timely aid. Could he live to-day and see the steady progress the cause is making his heart would rejoice. With will, and courage, and hope we are moving on steadily. We are a vast multitude marching from north and south, east and west on, on to victory and the "Legalized saloon must go."

Sup't. of Press Work,
MRS. E. TALLMAN.

WATER VS. RUM.

(From the Messiah Herald.)

Mr. Gough jotted down the following apostrophe on water and execration on rum as he had delivered them while holding a glass of water in his hand:

"There is no poision in that cup; no fiendish spirit dwells beneath those crystal drops to lure you and me and all of us to ruin: no spectral shadows play upon its waveles surface; no widows' groans and orphants' tears raise to God from those pl cid fountams: misery, crime, wretchedness, woe, want and rags come not within the hallowed precincts where cold water reigns supreme. Pure now as when it left its native heaven, giving vigor to our youth, strength to our manhood and solace to our old age. Cold water is beautiful, and bright, and pure everywhere. In the moon light fountains and the sunny rills in the warbling brook and the giant river; in the tangled wildwood and the cataract's spray, in the hand of beauty or on the lips of manhood – cold water is beautiful everywhere"

Now follows the execration on rum: "Rum! There is a poison in that cup. there is a serpent in that cup whose sting is madness and whose embrace is death. There dwells beneath that smiling surface a fiendish spirit which for centuries has been wandering over the earth, carrying on a war o desolation and destruction aginst mankind blighting and mildewing the noblest affections of the heart and corrupting with its foul breath and tide of human life and changing the glad, green earth into a lazar house. Gaze on it! But shudder as you gaze! Those sparkling drops are murder in disguise; so quite yet widows' groans and orphants' tears and maniacs' yells are in that cup. The worms that dieth not and the fire that is not quenched are in that cup.

"Peace and hope and love and truith dwell not within that fiery circle where dwells that desolating monster which men call rum. Corrupt now as when it left its native hell, giving fire to the eye, madness to the brain and ruin to the soul. Rum is vile and deadly and accursed everywhere. The poet would liken it in its fiery glow to the flames that flicker around the abode of the damned. The theologian would point you to the drunkard's doom, while the historian would unfold the dark record of the past and point you to the fate of empires and kingdoms lured to ruin by the siren song of the tempter. and sleeping now in cold obscurity, the wrecks of what once were great grand and glorious. Yes, rum is currupt and vile and deadly and accursed everywhere. Fit type and semblance of all earthly corruption.

"Base art thou yet as when the wise man warned us of thy power and bade us flee thy enchantmten. Vile art thou yet as when thou first went out on thy unholy mission filling earth with desolation and madness, woe and anguish. Deadly art thou yet as when thy envenomed tooth first took fast hold on human hearts, and thy serpent tongue first drank up the warm life blood of imortal souls. Accursed art thou yet as when the bones of thy first victim rotted in a damp grave, and its shriek echoed along the gloomy caverns of hell. Yes thou infernal spirit of rum: through all past time hast thou been as through all coming time thou shalt be, accursed everywhere.

"In the fiery fountains of the still; in the sething bubbles of the cauldron; in the kingly palace and the drunkard's hovel; in the rich man's cellar and the poor man's closet in the pestilential vapors of foul dens, and in the blaze of gilded saloons; in the hand of beauty and on the lip of manhood. Rum is vile and deadly and accursed everywhere.

"Rum we yield not to thy unhallowed influence, and together we have met to plan thy destruction. And by what new name shall we call thee, and to what shall we liken thee when we speak of thy attributes. Others may call thee child of perdition, the base born progeny of sin and Satan, the murderer of mankind and the destroyer of immortal souls: but I this night will givs thee a new name among men and crown thee with a new horror, and that new name shall be the sacramental cup of the Rum Power, and I will say to all the sons and daughters of earth—Dash it down! And thou, Rum shalr be next in my pilgrimage among men, and not alone shall my tongue utter it, but the groans of orphans in the agony and the cries of widows in their desolation shall proclaim it the enemy of home, the traducer of childhood and the destroyer of manhood, and whose only antidote is the sacramental cup of temprance, cold water.—JOHN B. GOUGH.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO.

A POPULAR FAMILY.

Jimmie: "How is it, Kate, that you always seem to be better off than I do for clothes? Do what I may, you always seem to get ahead of me."

Kate: "I don't know; I certainly do not make any exertion in that direction."

Jimmie: "Well, during the last few months, for example, you have taken up painting, without any teacher; you came to the rescue of an East Lothrop convicted her Delsarte class evening, and certainly we are all improving in grace under your instructions; I heard you telling Mamie Jones last evening how an elbow made music as in playing a violin; you seem to tie up all the latest 'fads,' and now just want to do under all circumstances; you entertain beautifully; and in the last month you have improved in health, owing, I presume, to your physical culture classes. Where do you get all of your information from in this little out-of-the-way place?—for you never go to the city."

Kate: "Way, Jemmie, you will make me vain. I hate only one source of information, but it is surprising how it meets all wants. A very seldom hour of anything new but what the next few days bring me full information on the subject. Myers' Ideal Magazine! And a great blessing it is to us all, for it really furnishes the reading for the whole household; father has given up his magazine that he has taken for years, as he says this one gives more and better information on the subjects of the day; good reason for that it is that that makes her such a famous housekeeper. In fact, we all agree that it is the only really FAMILY magazine published, as we have sent for a number full of them, and find that each one is all for us, another full for women, and another for children only, while there are suits every one of us; so we only need to take one instead of several, and that is where the economy comes in, for it is only $2.00 a year. Perhaps you think I am too lavish in my praise; but I will let you see one, or, better still, send 10 cents to the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th street, New York, for a sample copy, and I shall always consider that I owe you a great favor; and may be you will be cutting us out, as you say we have the reputation of being the best informed family in town. If that be so, it is Demorest's Family Magazine that does it."

This Magazine and the Buffalo Gazette, for $2.50 for one year.

Tariff Pictures.

"The 'carpet tax' liar has been singing small lately. No wonder. Every time he shows his head a fact like this hits it. An Eighth avenue firm sells Axminster and Moquette carpets at a yard. That is less than the duty, which is 60 cents a square yard and 40 per cent. ad valorem. Carpet is generally a little more than a yard wide; but letting it go at that, the duty on these goods is at least a yard. And yet the Millses and other free trade cranks are getting ready to shout in the year 1892 the tariff is a tax.'"—New York Press.

79 cents

A SCHEME is being talked up to construct a canal to connect Minneapolis and St. Paul with Duluth by the cheapest communication, that of water. Hon. B. F. Christlieb, of Long Lake, who is a surveyor and who has traveled over the country, pronounces the plan a practicable one at least a portion of the way.

THE Alliance Convention was held in Harmonia Hall, Minneapolis this week, and an election of officers held. Ignatius Donnelly was chosen President, A. L. Stromberg, Secretary, H. P. Bjorge, Treasurer, Dr. E. W. Fish, State Lecturer. From accounts some pretty warm discussions were had and some very hard work was done for the candidates of different views on Alliance matters.

"Now You See It and Now You Dont."

Nearly every day for several months we have been treated to a notice of Secretary Blaine's acceptance or denial of the republican nomination for President. One day he is going to write a letter positively refusing to be a candidate; the next he will accept the nomination if the party wants him and that there is a perfect understanding between him and Harrison that if one gets it the other don't; then again that his health is so precarious that it is doubtful if he could stand the strain! and next again that his health is remarkably good but he is going to write a letter positively declining unless the people want him; but lastly that he is well and hearty as a buck and only the Democrats are trying to make out that he is a sick man and if elected the country would have to be at the expense of burying him. But Mr. Editor take no worry on that score for it not buried at the convention he will be buried at the election. "REX."

A Left Handed Compliment.

Ex Senator Ingalls says of the late Senator Plumb that "he was not by nature a sentimentalist. There was no gush or pathos, no reverie or reminiscence, no retrospection about him. * * * * He lacked discipline and training in early years and while he has displayed energy much of it was irregular and at random. That he never heard him express a conviction that did not appear to be dictated by a sincere desire for the success of the Republican party." Why! Only think of it: the man must have been almost a saint. According to Mr. Ingalls, being a "sincere Republican" covered and atoned for many deficiencies. There are those, however, who cannot concieve how a bright man can be honest and at the same time be a "sincere Republican." But it appears, if reports are true, that the deceased Senator was a success as a financier, leaving a good round million dollars. What wonder there is such a scramble for seats in Congress when men with the defects ascribed to the late Senator are so successful in accumulating the ducats. "REX"

TARIFF REFORMERS.

Indiana Democrats Map Out a Campaign.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Dec. 30.—The executive committee of the Indiana Tariff Reform Association held its annual meeting to-day and mapped out plans for the coming campaign. The attitude of Speaker Crisp on tariff legislation led to a spirited discussion, and several members advocated the passage of resolutions demanding general tariff reform legislation. Others favored a conservative expression, and a resolution was finally adopted declaring that the great work of tariff reform was the predominating issue, and must not be subordinated to any other, but prosecuted with renewed energy in the fifty-second congress.—St. Paul Globe.

Mr. Huntington was one of our most highly esteemed citizens; was foremost in all public enterprises and was president of the village council at the time of his death. His remains were carried to Osage, Iowa, for interment, from whence he came to this place and where his wife was buried. Mr. Huntington was, at one time, master of the State Grange in Iowa and, in his life time, has held several positions of confidence and trust.

Elder Ringer supplied for Mr. Higgins last Sabbath morning, the latter hold the usual evening service which was well attended. We are having a series of revival meetings this week, Rev. Mr. Davis, of Buffalo, assisting Mr. Higgins. Mr. D. seems to be well adapted to revival service, being a good deal of an elocutionist and a fine singer and manages to make the service interesting.

Mr. Pitt filled the pulpit in the Methodist church last Sunday Mr. Davis being sick.

The Misses Dorman, N. Jacobs, F. Ewing and Polly Ames returned to school at Minneapolis Monday.

There is considerable sickness in this vicinity.

INDEPENDENCE.

Happy new year to ye editor and staff. May the incoming year prove a happy one to you and all my friends. May your days of pilgrimage here on earth be many. May your trials and sorrows be few and your life fraught with the most choice and richest blessings that is bestowed upon mankind. We have heard the funeral knell of the departing year. It has gone from us forever. The joys and sorrows it brought will never more return. On the beginning of this new year let us give our friends a happy greeting when we meet them hoping their remaining days here may be peace and sunshine.

J. N. Potter, of Rockford, preached at Armstrong last Sunday forenoon and on account of bad roads and cold weather there was not as large a turnout as usual. The frame of the A. C. church at Armstrong is up and they expect to push the work until the building is completed.

B. H. Hall is confined to his room from the kick of a horse. It struck him on a tender spot, the knee cap. He is under the care of Dr. O. R. Fassett. We hope it will not prove serious.

We hear talk of a wedding in Independence soon. Well let the good work go on there is nothing new about this and yet people make a great time over it.

It is hard to tell which is the thickest in woods, rabbit's tracks or tracks of the Nimrods.

Quite a good many from Independence attended the covenant and business meeting of the Independence A. C. church, held at Rockford, last Saturday afternoon. The meeting was quite lengthly and yet somewhat interesting. Most of the members stayed at the meeting until all business was finished.

It is neither sleighing nor wheeling. No doubt some are praying for snow.

The days are getting a little longer and by the middle of harvest they will be long enough. Ruth must have thought the days long enough in harvest when she gleaned in the field for Boaz. There is some very good reading in this short book.

Prohibition club meets to-night. They have a well arranged program for the evening.

The Alliance held a meeting at the Town Hall last Saturday evening for the purpose of electing two delegates to represent them at the Alliance convention to be held in Minneapolis 5, 6 and 7 present month. E. Hoisington and Joseph Murray were the delegates chosen to send to the convention.

A blush of shame should mantle the cheek of every patriotic American citizen that, in 1873 an American congress disregarding the lessons and traditions of the past, was asked to pass this bill to favor the creditor classes, especially the holders of American securities in Europe and yet it seems that the members of Congress and even President Grant who signed the bill did not know it contained such a measure. "The directors of the mint of France estimates the total coin circulation of the world to be $2,727,000,000 gold and $3,824,000,000 silver. Its principle distribution is as follows. France has in gold, $800,000,000, in silver, $700,000,000 being much the largest possessor of coin. The United States comes next viz. $702,000,000 in gold and $482,000,000 in silver. Now if these figures be true and they are supposed to be for they come from good authority why are our leading men crying "away with silver," when there is only $97,000,000 more silver in the world than there is gold. There is plenty more that could be said on this question but time and opportunity forbids but will mention another little item: Just before Christmas there was shipped from Canada to Boston $23,000 worth of Christmas turkeys. Uncle Sam's share out of this business according to the McKinley tariff was $8,750 and yet it is said thousands of the Boston people could not have a turkey dinner. Now it seems to me if I was a Canadian turkey I would protest against coming over to Boston just merely to preside at their Christmas festivities and would try and roost so high that no American tariff could ever reach me.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1, 1892

A prominent Democratic member of the House committee on Appropriations talked very interestingly of the situation to your correspondent. He said, "I am afraid that there is a disposition on the part of Democrats to expect too much from the present House. Reforms under our form of government must necessarily be slow, everywhere both branches of Congress and the Executive are in accord. We have to contend against a hostile Senate and Executive, but we hope to bring about some reforms in the tariff and in the expenditures of the government. There may be some slight difference of opinion in the party about whether it would be best for the House to prepare and pass an entire tariff bill, according to Democratic ideas of what such a measure should be, or to pass a number of bills correcting the inequalities of the present tariff law; but there can be none of course as to which of these plans are the most likely to bring practical results. The first of course could be passed by the House, but it could not possibly get through the Senate, while there is reason for believing that several of the latter can be gotten through the Senate, thus throwing the responsibility of their defeat upon Mr. Harrison.

"Now as to appropriations. I do not know what will be the result of the effort to have all of the appropriation bills restored to the Appropriation committee, but personally I agree with Mr. Holman in believing that its accomplishment would materially aid in cutting down the total of appropriations. I cannot say just where we shall make reductions, but I will say that every Democratic member of the House who has carefully studied the subject is of my opinion—that we can make a very large reduction in the total amount appropriated without interfering in the slightest with the workings of any useful branch of the Government service and that is the task which we have set for ourselves, and it is by no means a light one, as we shall have to do battle with the Republican Senate over the many extravagant amendments certain to be added to the appropriation bills by that body, which constantly grows more extravagant in its ideas."

Speaker Crisp has so far recovered from his attack of the grip as to be able to do a little talking on the new rules of the House with his Democratic colleagues of the committee on rules, Messrs McMillin and Catchings; but it is not thought that the new rules will be reported to the House for a couple of weeks, but that will not retard business much, as the House will work under the rules of the Fiftieth Congress until the new ones are ready.

Mr. Mills has almost entirely regained his health, and is daily seen on the streets, building himself up by taking long walks.

There are no new developments in the Chilian situation. The administration having sufficiently stirred up the country is now waiting to make up its mind what to do next.

The Republicans cannot hide the anxiety they feel about Mr. Blaine's intentions; they want to know just what he intends doing, in order that they may trim their sails accordingly, and all sorts of devices have been resorted to in the hope of getting the wily Secretary of State to declare himself. At a dinner party this week, attended by a score of Senators and Representatives belonging to the Republican party, it was decided to send an embassy to Mr. Blaine in the person of Col. W. W. Dudley, who, ever since his falling out with Mr. Harrison has been an ardent Blaine man, with a request for a positive yes or no as to his becoming his party's candidate. Dudley called on Mr. Blaine and devoted almost an hour to the most persuasive arguments he knew how to make, and left as wise as when he came, Mr. Blaine declining to commit himself.

Representative Springer says he has recieved many letters from all sections of the country, commending his plan of attacking the McKinley tariff bill in sections, by means of separate bills providing for the amendment, or outright repeal of the worst sections of that law. Mr. Springer thinks that the committee on Ways and Means will report a number of these separate tariff bills early in the session, and that they will be put through the House without any unnecessary delay.

The Republicans shouted too soon about wheat being put upon the free list by the reciprocity treaty with the British West India Islands. The official schedule of the treaty has been made public, and the best that wheat, corn, oats, salt or pickled pork and beef gets, is a reduction of 25 per cent in the existing duties.

"A Tariff on Coffee is a Tax, Unquestionably."—Senator C. K. Davis at Buffalo.

If tariff on coffee is a tax, tariff on sugar is a tax, tariff on tin is a tax, tariff on knives and pearl buttons and tariff on anything that has to be paid is tax. If you smuggle goods the tariff may be escaped, but that does not destroy the truth that TARIFF IS A TAX.

Briefly Told.

Half of the fresh water on the earth is found within a radius of 1,000 miles of St. Paul and Minneapolis.

The Great Northern in a run of 1,074 miles from St. Paul to Great Falls, Mont., has no grade of over .06 per cent, or 31.6 feet per mile, giving it the longest stretch of low grade track in the world.

Montana leades all the States in the production of precious metals.

Great Falls, Mont., has the largest water power in this country. The Missouri river tumbles 512 feet over a series of falls in a course of eight miles.

The best hunting and fishing resorts in the North West are to be found along the lines of the Great Northern Railway.

The Great Northern is one of the very few railways in the United States owning and operating its own entire equipment.

The Great Northern, with four tracks, is the main thoroughfare between St. Paul and Minneapolis; has the only double track to Lake Minnetonka.

The new extension of the Great Northern to Park Rapids, Minn., 209 miles from St. Paul, comes within about 25 miles of Lake Itaska, the source of the Mississippi.

Minnesota has more water surface and the largest body of standing white pine timber of any State in the Union.

A Splendid Trip.

A trip to Montana over the Great Northern is one of the most attractive in the West. From St. Paul the tourist takes the four-track route to Minneapolis. Crossing the Mississippi on a million dollar stone arch bridge, in full view of the Falls of St. Anthony and the largest flouring mills in the world, goes thence through the Park Region of Minnesota, with its myriad lakes, to the wheat valley of the Red River, to Devils Lake,—North Dakota's inland sea,—through the Mouse River country and the milk River Valley, passing Fort Assiniboine, the largest and finest military fort in the West, historic Benton, Great Falls City and the mighty cataracts of the Missouri river, then skirting the Rocky Mountains, with their sublime scenery, to Helena, the rich capital of Montana, thence over the continental backbone to Butte, the largest mining camp on earth.

Apples for Export.

The merits of the American apple are doubtless exceedingly appreciated abroad, since the business of exporting apples from this country to Europe, though of comparatively recent growth, is yearly becoming more important. Up to November 7, steamers from American ports had carried to the United Kingdom about 555,000 barrels of apples since the season began. Glasgow took 148,000 barrels, and London 49,778; but the most went to Liverpool. The freight to Liverpool is about 75 cents a barrel, which, with the low prices prevailing here, makes the business a profitable one to exporters. The first week of November, New-York shipped 17,140 barrels, Boston 29,842 barrels, and Montreal 41,000 barrels, a total of 18,982 barrels, against 18,250 barrels for the same week last year. The varieties sent abroad are pippins, kings, greenings, and snows.—Demorests Magazine.

A POPULAR FAMILY.

JENNIE: "How is it, Kate, that you always seem to 'strike it rich' in finding letters? Do what I may, you always seem to get ahead of me."

KATE: "I don't know; I certainly do not make any exertion in that direction."

JENNIE: "Well, during the last few months, for example, you have taken up painting, without any teacher; you came to the rescue of an old Ladies' Society for Befriending Children splendidly, and certainly we are all improving in grace under your instruction; I heard you telling to-my James last evening how an elder made manifest in praying Christian ought to be up to date in all worldly things, and now just when I'm in need of some general information on subjects beautifully; and in the last month you have improved in health, owing, you tell me, to your joyous outlook on life. I'd love to know your secret of extracting from so little cause the way pleasure—for you never go to the city."

KATE: "Why, Jennie, you will make me vain. I have only one source of information, but it is surprising how it serves me. I very seldom hear of anything new but what the next few days bring me full information on the subject. Money? Not Magazine! And a great treasure it is to me. It really furnishes the reading for the whole household; father has given up his magazine that he has taken for years, as he says this one gives more and better information on the subjects of the day; and mother says that it is that that makes her such a famous housekeeper. In fact, we all agree that it is the only really FAMILY magazine published, as we have sent for samples of all of them, and find that one is full for gents, another full for women, and another for children only, while there one suits every one of us; so we only need to take one instead of several, and that is where the economy comes in, for it is only $2.50 a year. Perhaps you think I am too lavish in my praise; but I will let you see ours, or, better still, send it on to the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th Street, New York, for a sample copy, and I shall always consider that I owe you a great favor; and may be you will be crediting us out, as you say we have the reputation of being the best informed family in town. If that be so, it is Demorest's Family Magazine that does it."

This Magazine and the Buffalo Gazette, for $2.50 for one year.

Tariff Pictures.

"The 'carpet tax' liar has been singing small lately. No wonder. Every time he shows his head a fact like this hits it. An Eighth avenue firm sells Axminster and Moquette carpets at a yard. That is less than the duty, which is 60 cents a square yard and 40 per cent. ad valorem. Carpet is generally a little more than a yard wide; but letting it go at that, the duty on these goods is at least a yard. And yet the Millses and other free trade cranks are getting ready to shout in the year 1892 the tariff is a tax.'"—New York Press.

79 cents

A SCHEME is being talked up to construct a canal to connect Minneapolis and St. Paul with Duluth by the cheapest communication, that of water. Hon. B. F. Christleib, of Long Lake, who is a surveyor and who has traveled over the country, pronounces the plan a practicable one at least a portion of the way.

THE Alliance Convention was held in Harmonia Hall, Minneapolis this week, and an election of officers held. Ignatius Donnelly was chosen President, A. L. Stromberg, Secretary, H. P. Elforge, Treasurer, Dr. E. W. Fish, State Lecturer. From accounts some pretty warm discussions were had and some very hard work was done for the candidates of different views on Alliance matters.

"Now You See It and Now You Dont."

Nearly every day for several months we have been treated to a notice of Secretary Blaine's acceptance or denial of the republican nomination for President. One day he is going to write a letter positively refusing to be a candidate: the next he will accept the nomination if the party wants him and that there is a perfect understanding between him and Harrison that if one gets it the other don't; then again that his health is so precarious that it is doubtful if he could stand the strain! and next again that his health is remarkably good but he is going to write a letter positively declining unless the people want him: but lastly that he is well and hearty as a buck and only the Democrats are trying to make out that he is a sick man and if elected the country would have to be at the expense of burying him. But Mr. Editor take no worry on that score for if not buried at the convention he will be buried at the election. "REX."

A Left Handed Compliment.

Ex Senator Ingalls says of the late Senator Plumb that "he was not by nature a sentimentalist. There was no gush or pathos, no reverie or reminiscence, no retrospection about him. * * * * He lacked discipline and training in early years and while he has displayed energy much of it was irregular and at random. That he never heard him express a conviction that did not appear to be dictated by a sincere desire for the success of the Republican party." Why! Only think of it: the man must have been almost a saint. According to Mr. Ingalls, being a "sincere Republican" covered and atoned for many deficiencies. There are those, however, who cannot conceive how a bright man can be honest and at the same time be a "sincere Republican." But it appears, if reports are true, that the deceased Senator was a success as a financier, leaving a good round million dollars. What wonder there is such a scramble for seats in Congress when men with the defects ascribed to the late Senator are so successful in accumulating the ducats. "REX"

TARIFF REFORMERS.

Indiana Democrats Map Out a Campaign.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Dec. 30.—The executive committee of the Indiana Tariff Reform Association held its annual meeting to-day and mapped out plans for the coming campaign. The attitude of Speaker Crisp on tariff legislation led to a spirited discussion, and several members advocated the passage of resolutions demanding general tariff reform legislation. Others favored a conservative expression, and a resolution was finally adopted declaring that the great work of tariff reform was the predominating issue, and must not be subordinated to any other, but prosecuted with renewed energy in the fifty-second congress.—St. Paul Globe.

Mr. Huntington was, at one time, master of the State Grange in Iowa and, in his life time, has held several positions of confidence and trust.

Elder Ringer supplied for Mr. Higgins last Sabbath morning, the latter held the usual evening service which was well attended. We are having a series of revival meetings this week, Rev. INDEPENDENCE.

Happy new year to ye editor and staff. May the incoming year prove a happy one to you and all my friends. May your days of pilgrimage here on earth be many. May your trials and sorrows be few and your life fraught with the most choice and richest blessings that is bestowed upon mankind. We have heard the funeral knell of the departing year. It has gone from us forever. The joys and sorrows it brought will never more return. On the beginning of this new year let us give our friends a happy greeting when we meet them hoping their remaining days here may be peace and sunshine.

J. N. Potter, of Rockford, preached at Armstrong last Sunday forenoon and on account of bad roads and cold weather there was not as large a turnout as usual. The frame of the A. C. church at Armstrong is up and they expect to push the work until the building is completed.

B. H. Hall is confined to his room from the kick of a horse. It struck him on a tender spot, the knee cap. He is under the care of Dr. O. R. Fassett. We hope it will not prove serious.

We hear talk of a wedding in Independence soon. Well let the good work go on there is nothing new about this and yet people make a great time over it.

It is hard to tell which is the thickest in woods, rabbit's tracks or tracks of the Nimrods.

Quite a good many from Independence attended the covenant and business meeting of the Independence A. C. church, held at Rockford, last Saturday afternoon. The meeting was quite lengthly and yet somewhat interesting. Most of the members stayed at the meeting until all business was finished.

It is neither sleighing nor wheeling. No doubt some are praying for snow.

The days are getting a little longer and by the middle of harvest they will be long enough. Ruth must have thought the days long enough in harvest when she gleaned in the field for Boaz. There is some very good reading in this short book.

Prohibition club meets to-night. They have a well arranged program for the evening.

The Alliance held a meeting at the Town Hall last Saturday evening for the purpose of electing two delegates to represent them at the Alliance convention to be held in Minneapolis 5, 6 and 7 present month. E. Hoisington and Joseph Murray were the delegates chosen to send to the convention.

A blush of shame should mantle the cheek of every patriotic American citizen that, in 1873 an American congress disregarding the lessons and traditions of the past, was asked to pass this bill to favor the creditor classes, especially the holders of American securities in Europe and yet it seems that the members of Congress and even President Grant who signed the bill did not know it contained such a measure. "The directors of the mint of France estimates the total coin circulation of the world to be $2,727,000,000 gold and $8,821,000,000 silver. Its principle distribution is as follows. France has in gold, $900,000,000, in silver, $700,000,000 being much the largest possessor of coin. The United States comes next viz. $702,000,000 in gold and $482,000,000 in silver. Now if these figures be true and they are supposed to be for they come from good authority why are our leading men crying "away with silver," when there is only $97,000,000 more silver in the world than there is gold. There is plenty more that could be said on this question but time and opportunity forbids but will mention another little item: Just before Christmas there was shipped from Canada to Boston $25,000 worth of Christmas turkeys. Uncle Sam's share out of this business according to the McKinley tariff was $8,750 and yet it is said thousands of the Boston people could not have a turkey dinner. Now it seems to me if I was a Canadian turkey I would protest against coming over to Boston just merely to preside at their Christmas festivities and would try and roost so high that no American tariff could ever reach me.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1, 1892

A prominent Democratic member of the House committee on Appropriations talked very interestingly of the situation to your correspondent. He said, "I am afraid that there is a disposition on the part of Democrats to expect too much from the present House. Reforms under our form of government must necessarily be slow, even where both branches of Congress and the Executive are in accord. We have to contend against a hostile Senate and Executive, but we hope to bring about some reforms in the tariff and in the expenditures of the government. There may be some slight difference of opinion in the party about whether it would be best for the House to prepare and pass an entire tariff bill, according to Democratic ideas of what such a measure should be, or to pass a number of bills correcting the inequalities of the present tariff law; but there can be none of course as to which of these plans are the most likely to bring practical results. The first of course could be passed by the House, but it could not possibly get through the Senate, while there is reason for believing that several of the latter can be gotten through the Senate, thus throwing the responsibility of their defeat upon Mr. Harrison.

"Now as to appropriations. I do not know what will be the result of the effort to have all of the appropriation bills restored to the Appropriation committee, but personally I agree with Mr. Holman in believing that its accomplishment would materially aid in cutting down the total of appropriations. I cannot say just where we shall make reductions, but I will say that every Democratic member of the House who has carefully studied the subject is of my opinion—that we can make a very large reduction in the total amount appropriated without interfering in the slightest with the workings of any useful branch of the Government service, and that is the task which we have set for ourselves, and it is by no means a light one, as we shall have to do battle with the Republican Senate over the many extravagant amendments certain to be added to the appropriation bills by that body, which constantly grows more extravagant in its ideas."

Speaker Crisp has so far recovered from his attack of the grip as to be able to do a little talking on the new rules of the House with his Democratic colleagues of the committee on rules, Messrs McMillin and Catchings; but it is not thought that the new rules will be reported to the House for a couple of weeks, but that will not retard business much, as the House will work under the rules of the Fiftieth Congress until the new ones are ready.

Mr. Mills has almost entirely regained his health, and is daily seen on the streets, building himself up by taking long walks.

There are no new developments in the Chilian situation. The administration having sufficiently stirred up the country is now waiting to make up its mind what to do next.

The Republicans cannot hide the anxiety they feel about Mr. Blaine's intentions; they want to know just what he intends doing, in order that they may trim their sails accordingly, and all sorts of devices have been resorted to in the hope of getting the wily Secretary of State to declare himself. At a dinner party this week, attended by a score of Senators and Representatives belonging to the Republican party, it was decided to send an embassy to Mr. Blaine in the person of Col. W. W. Dudley, who, ever since his falling out with Mr. Harrison has been an ardent Blaine man, with a request for a positive yes or no as to his becoming his party's candidate. Dudley called on Mr. Blaine and devoted almost an hour to the most persuasive arguments he knew how to make, and left us wise as when he came, Mr. Blaine declining to commit himself.

Representative Springer says he has received many letters from all sections of the country, commending his plan of attacking the McKinley tariff bill in sections, by means of separate bills providing for the amendment, or outright repeal of the worst sections of that law. Mr. Springer thinks that the committee on Ways and Means will report a number of these separate tariff bills early in the session, and that they will be put through the House without any unnecessary delay.

The Republicans shouted too soon about wheat being put upon the free list by the reciprocity treaty with the British West India Islands. The official schedule of the treaty has been made public, and the best that wheat, corn, oats, salt or pickled pork and beef gets, is a reduction of 25 per cent in the existing duties.

"A Tariff on Coffee is a Tax, Unquestionably."—Senator C. K. Davis at Buffalo.

If tariff on coffee is a tax, tariff on sugar is a tax, tariff on tin is a tax, tariff on knives and pearl buttons and tariff on anything that has to be paid is tax. If you smuggle goods the tariff may be escaped, but that does not destroy the truth that TARIFF IS A TAX.

Briefly Told.

Half of the fresh water on the earth is found within a radius of 1,000 miles of St. Paul and Minneapolis.

The Great Northern in a run of 1,074 miles from St. Paul to Great Falls, Mont., has no grade of over .06 per cent, or 31.6 feet per mile, giving it the longest stretch of low grade track in the world.

Montana leades all the States in the production of precious metals.

Great Falls, Mont., has the largest water power in this country. The Missouri river tumbles 512 feet over a series of falls in a course of eight miles.

The best hunting and fishing resorts in the North West are to be found along the lines of the Great Northern Railway.

The Great Northern is one of the very few railways in the United States owning and operating its own entire equipment.

The Great Northern, with four tracks, is the main thoroughfare between St. Paul and Minneapolis; has the only double track to Lake Minnetonka.

The new extension of the Great Northern to Park Rapids, Minn., 209 miles from St. Paul, comes within about 25 miles of Lake Itaska, the source of the Mississippi.

Minnesota has more water surface and the largest body of standing white pine timber of any State in the Union.

A Splendid Trip.

A trip to Montana over the Great Northern is one of the most attractive in the West. From St. Paul the tourist takes the four-track route to Minneapolis. Crossing the Mississippi on a million dollar stone arch bridge, in full view of the Falls of St. Anthony and the largest flouring mills in the world, goes thence through the Park Region of Minnesota, with its myriad lakes, to the wheat valley of the Red River, to Devils Lake,—North Dakota's inland sea,—through the Mouse River country and the milk River Valley, passing Fort Assiniboine, the largest and finest military fort in the West, historic Benton, Great Falls City and the mighty cataracts of the Missouri river, then skirting the Rocky Mountains, with their sublime scenery, to Helena, the rich capital of Montana, thence over the continental backbone to Butte, the largest mining camp on earth.

Apples for Export.

The merits of the American apple are doubtless exceedingly appreciated abroad, since the business of exporting apples from this country to Europe, though of comparatively recent growth, is yearly becoming more important. Up to November 7, steamers from American ports had carried to the United Kingdom about 555,000 barrels of apples since the season began. Glasgow took 148,000 barrels, and London 19,778; but the most went to Liverpool. The freight to Liverpool is about 75 cents a barrel, which, with the low prices prevailing here, makes the business a profitable one to exporters. The first week of November, New-York shipped 17,140 barrels, Boston 26,842 barrels, and Montreal 41,000 barrels, a total of 18,982 barrels, against 18,250 barrels for the same week last year. The varieties sent abroad are pippins, kings, greenings, and snows.—Demorests Magazine.

THE total area of bog land in Ireland is 2,830,000 acres of which 1,254,000 is mountain bog and the other is available for fuel. The average thickness of the peat is 12 feet.

EIGHTEEN HUNDRED pounds of gold are used every year for filling teeth in this country. It is worth over half a million dollars and is lost as effectually as if it were dropped into the ocean.

THE population of China is now estimated at 350,000,000, which is almost equal to the entire population of Europe. The Chinese national debt is one of the smallest, amounting to only $38,500,000.

THE majority of the Scottish Gypsies have spread over a vast tract of country. Here they have gradually become lost to view as a distinctive race. In Europe they are found in the greatest number to-day in Hungary and Wallachia, where there are 500,000.

THE Hawaiian islands were discovered by Gaetano, a Spanish navigator, in 1542. The independence of these islands was recognized by the United States in 1820, and more formally in 1843; by Belgium in 1844, and by England and France later in the same year.

JOHN W. MACKAY made his usual Christmas gift of one-half month's salary to every employe of the Commercial Cable Company, of which he is president. There are 200 names on the pay roll, and the distribution amounted to $20,000, which Mr. Mackay pays out of his own pocket.

AN electric plow has just been invented. Horses are dispensed with and the power is supplied by a storage battery. Poor Richard saw a long way into the future and even drew lightning from the clouds, but he never dreamed of the man at the plow-handle being an electrical engineer.

THE historic "Treaty Elm," under which William Penn made his alliances with the Indians, was blown down in 1810, and in 1827 a monument was erected to mark the spot. This memorial, long since forgotten, was recently hunted up by a Philadelphia reporter, who found it, dilapidated and defaced, in an abandoned lumber yard at Kensington.

Food inspection ought to be followed by the arrest and punishment of the men found engaged in selling impure food. The destruction of the worthless material is not enough. The dealer is likely to repeat the offense and take the chances of the destruction of the impure food. But if he were personally punished he would be more likely to be careful thereafter.

AFRICAN savages have the best teeth in the world, and one reason for this fact is that they take such excellent care of them, cleaning them several times a day. For this purpose they use a short piece of wood, which becomes softened by rubbing in the mouth. Thus the message of a toothbrush is: "As I remember my teeth constantly, so I often think of you."

THE authorities of the city of Tamboy have printed check books containing each ten to twenty checks. Every baker in the city gives for every check a pound of bread, for which it charges the city two kopecks. The residents of the city were notified not to deal out any money to mendicants, for such money is in most cases spent on drink, but to buy checks at the city hall and to distribute them among the poor.

SENATOR WASHBURN, of Minnesota, wrote to Secretary of the Navy Tracy asking the use of a naval vessel to transport to Europe the breadstuffs contributed in this country for the relief of the famine sufferers in Russia. Secretary Tracy replied: "It gives me pleasure to say that the navy department concurs heartily in this proposal, and will willingly do all in its power to further so generous and suitable a project."

OVER 44,000 Russian Hebrew refugees landed in New York in the six months ending November 30. They must be disposed of, dispersed, that is, and that is the task to which the benevolent Hebrews of New York are addressing themselves. To accomplish this they have a fund of $68,000 of their own raising which they will use for transportation, and for the purposes of agricultural settlement they have the use of the $2,400,000 fund sent over by Baron Hirsch.

THE growth of the Argentine Republic in the past thirty years has been remarkable. According to recent statistics the population of the republic is now 4,000,000, as against 1,350,000 in 1861. There are now 7,000,000 acres under cultivation where in 1861 there were but 400,000, and while in that year there were but 15 miles of railroad in the country there are now over 5,000 miles in operation and 6,000 more, including the great transcontinental route, in course of construction. The public debt has grown pretty vigorously, too, however. It has increased from $17,000,000 to $613,000,000.

THE question as to whether anything can be depended upon in this uncertain and fluctuant world is becoming one of importance. Here is a Boston professor who swears that the parallels of latitude are not immutably parallel, but wriggle like a fishworm. If people cannot pin their faith in the parallelism of parallel lines, if the parallel is not only deadly but out of plumb, what can they stick to, and on what can they stand and be not moved? Are the poles polar, and will the equator continue to equate? Star-eyed science is grubbing too much, and these unsettling discoveries make old beliefs to shake and sag.

THE veteran traveler, Paul du Chaillu, has explained why he abandoned African exploration. Upon one of his journeys in the dark continent the chief of the territory through which he was passing greeted him with distinguished consideration. He even brought out a row of 853 comely negro maidens, inviting Chaillu to take his pick for a wife. "I told him," said the traveler, afterward, "that the proof of his good will overpowered me, but that I was afraid to choose one lest the others might be jealous. The chief pondered a moment, then exclaimed: 'Well, friend, take 'em all.' Then I fled."

PERISHED BY FIRE.

Lives Lost in Burning Buildings at Chicago, Nashville, Tenn., Hanford, Cal. and Columbus, O.

CHICAGO, Jan. 4.—Early this morning a fire occurred in the Waverly hotel at 262 Clark street and resulted in the death of two persons and the serious injury of two more. Paul Wood, an artist aged 17 years, was crushed to death while attempting to escape in the elevator. John Meredeth was suffocated in his room on the second floor. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel F. Wood, parents of the dead boy, were badly crushed in the elevator.

The fire originated in the rear of the restaurant on the first floor. Before it was discovered by the cook or waiters it had gained a good start and a large volume of thick smoke was rolling up the elevator shaft. Clarence Latimer, the night clerk, first discovered the blaze. He at once began awakening the guests. His cries of fire were followed by the utmost confusion. Men, women and children ran here and there in their night-clothes, screaming with fright. Finally some of the cooler headed opened the windows and let the dense smoke clear away. After a time the inmates became quiet and returned to their rooms and put on their clothes.

After the smoke had cleared away the firemen found John Meredith on the second floor overcome by smoke and dead.

When the first cries of fire were heard Harry Wood, a brother of the boy who was killed, was talking in the restaurant with George Hinman, the head waiter. He went to awaken his father, mother, sister and brother, who were sleeping on the fourth floor. He knocked on the doors and hastened back. They did not come down as soon as he expected and he started up after them the second time. As he passed the second story he spied the elevator and getting in he ran it to the top floor. Groping his way through the smoke he arrived at his father's room and succeeded in getting his father and mother into the elevator. They were closely followed by the brother and sister. Just as they were starting down J. E. Smith jumped into the elevator and, according to Harry Wood, seized the lever and prevented him from controlling the machine. When the ground floor was reached he jumped out, closely followed by his brother. The elevator began to ascend then and Mr. and Mrs. Wood were caught between the floor and the top of the door. They were severely crushed. The elevator then began to descend and it was then that Paul Wood lost his life. It is supposed that he was overcome by the smoke and fell unconscious into the pit of the elevator shaft. When found he was terribly crushed between the elevator and the floor. His clothes were torn into ribbons. Mrs. Wood was carried to a drug store.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Jan. 4.—Ten years ago in May the most disastrous fire that Nashville has ever had occurred around the corner of College and Church streets. Saturday night another fire burned over the site of the fire of ten years ago, causing a loss of $475,000. The fire started in the rear of the store occupied by Webb, Stevenson & Co., house furnishers, at 5:40, and was not gotten under control until 10 o'clock p. m.

Three colored firemen lost their lives. They were fighting the fire at the time, standing on a three-story building occupied by Phillips, Burtoff & Co. They were pouring a stream of water into the building of A. J. Warren, when it toppled over upon them, crushing them all to death. Their names are as follows: Capt. C. C. Gowdy, Stokes Allen and Harvey Ewing.

There is but little doubt that the fire was of incendiary origin, as, while fighting the fire, one of the firemen saw an unknown white man deliberately set fire to Atwell & Sneed's building and immediately jump from the second story and run away in the darkness.

HANFORD, Cal., Jan. 4.—Fire which broke out early Sunday morning destroyed $8,000 worth of property, caused the death of four persons and badly injured six others. The fire originated in the sick-room of O. D. Reed, in the two-story frame lodging house of Mrs. Kate Jacobs. Lou Woodward, who was watching with Reed, was pouring oil into a coal oil stove when the can caught fire. Failing to extinguish it with blankets she threw the blazing can into the hall, where the flames rapidly spread. The lodging-house, with the Methodist church and an adjoining dwelling, were entirely destroyed. Three men were burned to death. They were Elmer E. Spofford, of Chester, N. H.; F. B. Tucker, of Sacramento, and E. W. Foster, of the Star Nervine Company. Many of the inmates jumped from the second-story windows, receiving more or less severe injuries. T. C. Hammond, a printer, was badly burned and hurt by jumping and died a few hours afterward. Five or six others were bruised and burned, but will probably all recover.

COLUMBUS, O., Jan. 4.—A building formerly occupied by the Booth Carriage Company burned Saturday night. It was occupied by the Paynter Manufacturing Company and the McCall Iron Fence Company. Several firemen were injured by a falling wall. Andrew Kerins, Jr., aged 25, died from a fractured skull. Philip Kersch and C. H. Klinger received severe wounds and will probably die. The others escaped with scalp wounds.

FIFTEEN PERSONS DROWNED.

A Bark Run Down by an Ocean Steamer—The Captain Saved.

LONDON, Jan. 4.—A steamer believed to be the Red Star line's Noordland, which sailed from Antwerp Saturday for New York, ran down the British bark Childwell off the Wieling lightship and cut her to pieces. The bark sank and fifteen of her crew were drowned. The steamer continued on her voyage without offering assistance. The Great Eastern Company's steamer Ipswich rescued the captain and the remainder of the crew, who were found clinging to the only remaining mast.

Frozen in a Ravine.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., Jan. 4.—Two of the three prisoners who overpowered the deputy and escaped from the jail here New Year's eve have been recaptured. One is dead, the other dying. They are Kirgen, the wealthy and notorious cattle thief, and Charles Miller, the boy double murderer. Kirgen is dead, succumbing to cold and hunger. The dead and dying were found in a ravine by a volunteer posse. Miller was dragging himself across the body of Kirgen in an effort to keep warm, and hailed his captors as rescuers. No trace has been found of the third man.

CONVICTED.

Dr. Graves Found Guilty of Poisoning Mrs. Barnaby—He Is Said to Have Made a Confession Implicating One of His Lawyers.

DENVER, Col., Jan. 4.—The jury in the Graves case has returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree. The verdict of the jury was rendered at 9:45 o'clock Saturday night. When it was read by the clerk of the court Dr. Graves started from his chair and then sank back and buried his face in his hands. His attorney made a motion for a new trial. When Dr. Graves was asked what he thought of the verdict he replied by repeatedly saying that it was a great shock and surprise to him. The convicted man was taken to jail. His wife and mother were prostrated by the finding of the jury. Under the law of Colorado a man sentenced to death must suffer the penalty within thirty days from the time the sentence is passed.

At an early hour this morning Judge Rising and District Attorney Stevens will visit the county jail and take a confession from Dr. Graves. In this confession, according to John H. Conrad, the accused will voluntarily tell the entire story of his connection with the late Josephine B. Barnaby.

He will confess having sent a bottle of poison, but claim it was done at the instigation of Lawyer Ballou, in order to prevent an investigation as to their wasteful expenditures of the money received from the executors. If this confession is made the defendant will be at the mercy of the prosecution. His counsel will discontinue all interest in his behalf. In return for this confession the prosecution may agree to have the death penalty suspended. The city is in a ferment of excitement.

The worth of the alleged confession depends upon the trustworthiness of Deputy Sheriffs Wilson and Means. Dr. Graves confessed on the way to the jail. That is what Deputy Wilson stated to District Attorney Stevens and John H. Conrad. At the jail Sunday Dr. Graves emphatically denied having made a confession. He said the deputies endeavored to persuade him to acknowledge his guilt, but, being innocent, he could not do so. Col. Ballou left for the east Saturday night, but an effort will be made to intercept him and have him brought back.

[The crime for which Dr. Graves is convicted took place in this city last April, but the history leading up to it dates back for a number of years. Mrs. Barnaby was the wife of J. H. Barnaby, a wealthy merchant of Providence, who secured a divorce from his wife, leaving her with a fortune of $100,000 and an annual income of $2,500. Dr. Graves was her intimate friend and financial adviser on a salary of $5,000 a year. Mrs. Barnaby was a great traveler, and she spent a portion of each summer at the residence of Edward Bennett at Blue Mountain Lake, N. Y. Last spring while there she and Dr. Graves had a misunderstanding. Mrs. Barnaby immediately started west and eventually arrived in this city, where she visited the Worrells. April 3, six days before she arrived here, a package came to her address which contained a bottle of liquid labeled "Fine old whisky from your friend in the woods." The night of the 13th after a drive she and Mrs. Worrell drank the contents of the bottle and both were taken ill, and Mrs. Barnaby after suffering terrible agony died. Mrs. Worrell recovered at the end of a few days. Physicians declared that the woman died from arsenical poisoning, and the detectives were set to work. The Worrells were beneficiaries in Mrs. Barnaby's will to the extent of $10,000 and Dr. Graves for $25,000. Suspicion was cast upon the Worrells, but no action was ever taken. The writing upon the package resembled that of Dr. Graves and he was indicted for murder.]

SCATTERED BY RANGERS.

Texas Troops Attack Garza's Followers, Forcing Them to Flee.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Jan. 4.—There is much excitement in military department headquarters and among the people of this city over the serious situation on the border. H. J. MacNeil, of this city, Saturday evening received a telegram from his father, Capt. J. S. MacNeil, of the Texas rangers, which states that he had just had a desperate encounter with the Garza men. His command numbered only a few men. They were scouting through a chaparral in Starr county when they met a detachment of about thirty Garza revolutionists.

The rangers at once opened fire on the revolutionists and a number of the latter were severely wounded. Nearly 1,000 shots were exchanged, but none of the rangers were wounded. The telegram states that the revolutionists were all well armed and well mounted. They were closely pursed by the rangers for a considerable distance, but finally scattered and all escaped capture except a few of those severely wounded.

It is reported from Laredo that five Texas rangers were killed Friday in a fight with the revolutionists.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Jan. 4.—A dispatch to government headquarters reports that on Saturday Second Lieut. Langhorne of the Third cavalry, with thirty regulars and a posse of deputy marshals, struck one of the Garza bands and an engagement followed. The bandits were found 5 miles above Rio Grande City and many shots were interchanged and some Mexicans wounded and some of the United States soldiers were hurt. Col. Pablo Munoz was captured. Two gross of cartridges and many revolutionary badges were taken.

The Mexican government has offered a reward of $300,000 for Garza's head, but they will hardly get him. So far the Mexicans have killed over a hundred men on suspicion of being revolutionists, and this has tended to drive other poor ranchers to join the revolt. At Pueblo the populace revolted and every priest has been placed in jail.

KILLED HIS BROTHER.

A Quarrel at Springfield, Ill., Ends in a Fratricide.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 4.—An affray occurred early Sunday morning between two brothers named Loomis, when William, aged 27 years, leveled a double-barreled shotgun at Charles, aged 14 years, and fired both barrels at him, killing him instantly. William was found to be badly cut in the neck and claims it was done by his brother. He is in jail. The family bears a bad name, several of them having served terms in the penitentiary.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The brief of counsel for Samuel Fielden and Michael Schwab, the Chicago anarchists who are confined in the penitentiary at Joliet, Ill., under a life sentence for complicity in the Haymarket riot, was filed in the United States supreme court Saturday. The cases are to come up within two weeks for argument.

JOHN B. CARSON.

Death at Chicago of This Prominent Railway Man.

CHICAGO, Jan. 5.—John B. Carson, ex-president of the Chicago & Western Indiana Belt Line, and ex-president of the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago railway, died at the Hotel Metropole Monday morning after an illness which drove him from his business two years ago. Mr. Carson had been confined to his rooms for nearly six weeks and sank gradually down to death. His end was peaceful and death came easily.

[John B. Carson was born at Jersey Shore, Pa., in October, 1833. Early in life he went to work with a corps of engineers who were surveying the Cleveland & Columbus railway route. Thus he became identified with railroad work and started in the business, which he pursued for the rest of his life. His first prominent position was that of general freight agent of the Toledo & Western road, in 1866. In 1873 he was made general manager of the "Blue Line," with headquarters at Rochester, N. Y., and in 1878 accepted a like position with the Hannibal & St. Joseph road, which was soon afterwards purchased by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Company. Mr. Carson retained his position as general manager and added to the duties of that office those of vice president. In 1884 he was elected vice-president and general manager of the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago (the Monon), and it was then that he first came to Chicago. In 1885 he was elected president of the Chicago & Western Indiana Belt line, and performed the duties of that position in conjunction with his work at the Monon. It was soon after that time that his ill health overtook him. He retained his office at the Monon until March, 1889, and carried the work of the Belt until June, 1890, when he was compelled by his weak physical condition to retire from business life. Mr. Carson was a man of considerable wealth. He leaves a fortune which is estimated to be more than a million dollars.]

WILL APOLOGIZE.

The Chilian Government, It Is Said, Has Ordered Minister Montt to Express Its Regret for the Baltimore Outrages.

VALPARAISO, Jan. 5.—It is said here that the Chilian government has cabled orders to Minister Pedro Montt at Washington to make a sincere apology to the United States for the unfortunate and deplorable attack upon the Baltimore sailors October 16 last. The apology is unqualified in its character, it is added. Other matters which have been in dispute between Chili and the United States are to be speedily considered by the new administration. From semi-official sources it is reported that the reason the Santiago police are kept in the vicinity of the American legation is that the intendente of the city is in constant receipt of letters containing threats to burn and sack the legation. It is said on the best authority that the government desires to have the police near at hand so as to prevent the execution of any such threats. It is no secret here that many of those who cherish ideas of war between the United States and Chili are friends of Balmaceda.

A COLOSSAL CORPSE.

The Remains of a Famous Fat Man Placed in a Vault.

BALTIMORE, Md., Jan. 5.—The body of John Dietel, who was known to dime museum visitors as "The fattest fat man in America," and who recently died, has been placed in a vault here. Services were conducted by Rev. N. Burkart at the home of the dead man's mother. The coffin was 5 feet 6 inches long, 35½ inches wide and 27 inches in depth. At the time of his death in Cincinnati he weighed about 420 pounds. It required the strength of ten men to bear the coffin from the wagon to the vault. No hearse large enough to carry the coffin could be secured, and so the remains were taken to the cemetery in one of the undertaker's wagons.

HE CHOSE DEATH.

A Man Kills Himself While Officers of the Law Are Forcing the Door of His Room.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 5.—A. P. Patton, a fugitive from justice, shot and killed himself in his room at 822 Choteau avenue at 11 o'clock Monday morning while the police were forcing the door to arrest him. This tragic affair is the end of Patton's missteps in Pike county, Ill., where he was wanted on a charge of raising checks on school-teachers and members of the school-district committee, who bought school charts of him. He was 28 years old and was the only son of A. Patton, keeper of a hotel at Carrollton, Greene county, Ill.

Granted a Reprieve.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The request of the Italian government for a reprieve in the case of Trezza, the Italian, under sentence of death in New York, was presented to Secretary Blaine by the Marquis Imperiali. Mr. Blaine submitted the matter to Gov. Flower, and has received a telegram from the governor saying that the request would be granted, and nothing would be done in the case until advised by the state department of the further wishes of the Italian authorities, who are now investigating the case.

Both Insane.

NEWCOMERSTOWN, O., Jan. 5.—Jesse Moore, a popular young farmer and stockman residing just east of Newcomerstown, started west a week ago in company with his young wife to buy land. Sunday he returned a raving maniac. A few hours later his wife, who unaided had brought her crazy husband from Areadia, Ill., yielded to the strain and became insane. It is believed that with proper rest her reason will be restored. Steps are being taken to send Moore to the asylum at Columbus.

DONALD KENNEDY
Of Roxbury, Mass., Says:

Strange cases cured by my Medical Discovery come to me every day. Here is one of Paralysis—Blindness—and the Grip. Now how does my Medical Discovery cure all these? I don't know, unless it takes hold of the Hidden Poison that makes all Humor.

VIRGINIA CITY, NEVADA, Sept. 9th, 1891.
Donald Kennedy—Dear Sir: I will state my case to you: About nine years ago I was paralyzed in my left side, and the best doctors gave me no relief for two years, and I was advised to try your Discovery, which did its duty, and in a few months I was restored to health. About four years ago I became blind in my left eye by a spotted cataract. Last March I was taken with La Grippe, and was confined to my bed for three months. At the end of that time, as in the start, then it struck me that your Discovery was the thing for me; so I got a bottle, and before it was half gone I was able to go to my work in the mines. Now in regard to my eyes, as I lost my left eye, and about six months ago my right eye became affected with black spots over the sight as did the left eye—perhaps some twenty of them—but since I have been using your Discovery they all left my right eye but one; and, thank God, the bright light of heaven is once more making its appearance in my left eye. I am wonderfully astonished at it, and thank God and your Medical Discovery. Yours truly, HANK WHITE.

JEALOUSY.

And, tell me not, as love is true,
Sweetheart, you have no other lover;
Since, nightly, when I come to woo,
I see him near you slyly hover.

When autumn fires blaze and flare,
Or when the summer moonlight's mellow,
He loves to linger near your chair;
He is a most persistent fellow!

And then a dreamy, tender look
Grows in your eyes—a mute confession;
Your head droops, pensive, o'er your book;
I sigh, but leave you with discretion.

I know he comes to take my place;
I've stayed too late—a stupid blunder!
To greet his kiss you turn your face,
And I am jealous. Do you wonder?

There, do not pout and feign surprise,
Nor scoff at jealous lovers lightly.
'Tis sleep, enamored of your eyes,
Who woos you, little sweetheart, nightly!

—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

HIS MOTHER.

A Devoted Son and a Sensible Sweetheart.

The cold-gray shadows of the wintry twilight had enveloped tree and meadow and sluggish forest streams in their uncertain mist, and factory chimneys flung their fiery banners of smoke against the leaden sky, a basso relievo that would have made Rembrandt himself rejoice, and the hum of never-ceasing machinery in the little town rose above the rush of the river, like the buzz of a gigantic insect.

Charles Emery, the day foreman in the rolling-mills, was just retiring to his home, having been relieved by John Elter, the night official, and as he walked along, his feet sounding crisply on the hard-frozen earth, he whistled softly to himself, as light-hearted as a bird.

"You're going with us to-night, Charley?" cried a gay voice, and two or three young men came by.

"Do you mean—!"

"I mean to the opera!"

For upon that especial evening there was to be an opera in the little town of Crystalton, a genuine New York company with a chorus, a full orchestra and all the paraphernalia of scenery and costume which provincial residents so seldom enjoy, and the younger population were on the quivive of delighted expectation.

"I am going," said Mr. Emery, slowly, "but not with you!"

"But you will change your mind, though," said Harrison Vail, "when you hear that Kate Marcy is to be of the party. Kate Marcy and the Miss Hallowells and Fanny Hewitt. There are eight of us going. We've kept a seat on purpose for you."

"I have engaged myself to another lady," Emery replied, after a second or so of hesitation.

Vail laughed.

"Well, I'm sorry for it," said he, "but Miss Marcy is not a girl who need pine for a cavalier. We'll keep the seat for you until a quarter of eight, in case you should see fit to change your mind. Only let me give you a word of warning, old fellow! Kate Marcy is a high-spirited girl; it won't do to trifle too much with her!"

Charles Emery went on his way rather graver and more self-absorbed. He had asked his mother the day before to go to see "The Mascot," and his mother's eyes had brightened with genuine delight.

"Your father often used to take me, Charley," she said, "when we were young people and lived in New York. But it's twenty years and more since I have been to an opera. And if you're quite sure, dear that there is no young girl whom you would rather take—"

"As if any young girl in the world could be to me what my own darling little mother is!" replied Emery, smiling across the table to her.

"Then I shall be so delighted to go," said Mrs. Emery.

And her voice and eyes bore happy witness to the truth of her words.

But now that a regular party had been organized, and Kate Marcy had promised to join it, things looked very differently to the young man. For a moment he almost regretted that he had engaged himself to take his mother.

"She would be as well pleased with any concert," he said to himself, "and I should have the opportunity of sitting all the evening next to Kate Marcy. I'll ask her to let me off this time. She won't care."

When he went into the little sitting-room of their humble domain, and saw his mother, with her silver-gray hair rolled into puffs on either side of her almost unwrinkled brow, her best black silk donned, and the one opal brooch which she owned pinned into the white lace folds at her bosom, his heart misgave him.

"I have been trimming my bonnet over with some violet-velvet flowers," said she, smiling, "so as to do you no discredit, Charley; and I have a new pair of violet kid gloves. And now you must drink your tea. I've made some of your favorite cream biscuit, and the kettle is nearly at the boil. Oh, Charley, you'll laugh at me, I'm afraid, but I feel exactly like a little girl going to her first children's party. It's so seldom, you know, that a bit of pleasure comes in my way!"

And then Charles Emery made up his mind that his mother was more to him, in her helpless old age and sweet, affectionate dependence, than any blooming damsel whose eyes shone like stars and whose cheeks rivaled the September peach.

"Going with some one else!" said Kate Marcy, rather surprised and not exactly pleased.

She was a tall, beautiful maiden, the belle of Crystalton, and rather an heiress in her own right, with all the rest. She certainly liked Charles Emery, and she rather surmised that he liked her also. And when she had been studying up her toilet for the opera, she had selected a blue dress, with blue corn flowers for her hair and ornaments of turquoise, because she had once heard Mr. Emery say that blue was his favorite color.

"Going with some one else?" she repeated. "Well, of course he has a right to suit himself."

And she kept within her own soul the fevered fire of girlish resentment, the gnawing pangs of jealousy that disturbed her all the while that she was sitting waiting for the great green curtain to be drawn up.

Until, of a sudden, there was a slight bustle on the row of seats beyond, and Mr. Emery entered with his mother.

And then Kate's overgloomed face grew bright again. She drew a long breath of relief and turned to the stage; it was as if the myriad gas lights had all of a sudden been turned up; as if all the mimic world of the opera house had grown radiant.

Never was voice sweeter in her ears than the somewhat thin and exhausted warble of Mlle. Rosalie de Vigue, the prima donna; never did scenery glow with such natural tints or footlights shine more softly. Kate Marcy declared that the opera was "perfection!"

"Yes, but," said pert little Nina Cummings, "do look at Charley Emery, with that little old woman! Why couldn't he have come to sit with us!"

Kate bit her lip. In the crowd now surging out of the aisles of the little opera house she could scarcely venture to express her entire opinion; but she said, in a low, earnest tone:

"I don't know what you think of it, Nina, but I, for my part, respect Mr. Emery a thousand times more for his politeness to his mother."

And, almost at the same second, she found herself looking directly into Charles Emery's eyes.

For a moment only. The crowd separated them, almost ere they could recognize one another; but Kate felt sure—and her cheek glowed vivid scarlet at the certainty—that he had heard her words.

"Charley," said little Mrs. Emery, looking in her son's face, as they emerged into the veil of softly falling snow, which seemed to enwrap the whole outer world in dim, dazzling mystery, "who was that girl?"

"What girl, mother?" with a little pardonable hypocrisy.

"The one, Charley, with the big blue eyes, and the sweet face, wrapped in a white, fleecy sort of hood—the one who said she respected you?"

"It was Kate Marcy, mother."

"She has a face like an angel," said Mrs. Emery, softly.

The next day the foreman of the rolling-mills went boldly to the old Marcy homestead, whose red-brick gables, sheeted over with ivy, rose up out of the leafless elms and beeches, just beyond the noise and stir of busy Crystalton.

"Miss Marcy," he declared, "without intending to be an eavesdropper, I heard what you said last night."

"It was not meant for your ears, Mr. Emery," said Kate, coloring a soft rosy pink.

"But," he pursued, looking her full in the face, "I cannot be satisfied with mere cold respect, Miss Marcy. I want a warmer, tenderer feeling toward myself. If you could teach yourself to love me—"

The dimples came out around Kate Marcy's coral-red lips, wreathing her smile in wondrous beauty.

"The lesson is already learned, Mr. Emery," said she. "I do love you. I have loved you for a long time."

And the foreman of the rolling-mills went home, envying neither king nor prince that day.

"But I never should have loved you so dearly," his young wife told him afterward, "if you hadn't been so good to that dear little mother of yours. In my eyes you never looked half so handsome as when you stood bending over her gray head, in the crowded hall of the opera house that night."

"You see," said Emery, laughing at her enthusiasm, "I agreed with the hero of the old Scotch ballad:

"'Sweethearts I may get many a one,
But of mithers ne'er another.'"

THE MANUFACTURE OF MEAT.

Excessive Fatness in the Meat Product of the United States.

Meat is a manufactured product for which a large amount of raw material is required. The manufacture of meat is a process of transforming the vegetable protein, fats, and carbohydrates of grass and grain into the animal protein and fat of beef, pork and mutton. The same principle applies in the production of milk, eggs and other animal foods. In the most economical feeding of animals it takes a number of pounds of hay or corn to make a pound of beef or pork. In other words, let the farmer make animal protein and fat from vegetable materials in the best way he can, and still he must consume a large quantity of soil product to produce a small amount of animal food. Hence animal foods are costlier than vegetable. This is the simple explanation of the fact that in most parts of the world meat is the food of only the well to do while the poor live almost entirely on vegetable food. Thus ordinary people in Europe eat but little meat, and in India and China they have none at all. It is hard enough for them to get the nutriment they need in vegetable forms. Meats they cannot afford.

But meat making in the United States to-day is far more wasteful than it need be, on account of the excessive fatness of our meats. This comes about very naturally. We have a great excess of soil product in the valleys of the Ohio and Mississippi and on the ranches of the west. At present the pork maker and the ranchmen convert a large portion of this into very fat meat. The pork producers of the great corn growing states select the breeds of swine which, as they say, "will take the most corn to market," and have thus got into the way of growing animals that are little else than masses of fat. The beef-growers of the western ranches, and those in the east as well, produce excessively fat meat. Part of the fat is trimmed out of the meat by the butcher, part is left on our plates at the table to go to the soap man or garbage barrel, and part is eaten. Unfortunately very many of us eat much more than fat, both in meat and butter, than is needed for nourishment, and thus do injury to our health.—Century.

Wanted It to Be Gentle.

A man who had been arraigned on the charge of stealing a sheep was so sensitive that it required all the judge's persuasiveness to keep him from breaking down under his heavy load of humiliation.

"Oh, judge," he pleaded, "please be gentle with me. I can't stand this awful depression."

"That may be," the judge replied, "but didn't you steal that sheep?"

"Oh, yes, judge, but I beg you to make my sentence appear as gentle as possible. I am a great believer in appearances."

"I will try to favor you," said the judge. "Instead of sentencing you for stealing a sheep, I will sentence you for stealing a lamb."

"Oh, thank you, judge, but now as to the length of the term—how about that?"

"Just the same for a lamb as for a fifteen-year-old ram, but the lamb sentence has a gentler appearance."

"Oh, thank you, judge," he faltered, and he smiled faintly; still there was something about the sentence that did not please him.—Arkansaw Traveler.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Charles Dudley Warner was born in Plainfield, N. J., and a few days ago the town, by official vote, resolved to call the hill on which he was born "Warner Hill," in honor of Mr. Warner and in recognition of his generosity to his native town.

—Alexandre Dumas is greatly hampered in his literary work by his wife's protracted and painful illness. On her account he stays at Marly, and is said to walk fast and aimlessly about the adjacent forests in all kinds of weather. This mental distress completely unfits him for the use of the pen.

—The name of Swinburne is almost as closely associated with the Isle of Wight as that of Tennyson. The poet himself spent much of his early life at the Undercliff. His brother and his father, Admiral Swinburne, are buried at Bonchurch, and several members of his family own property in the island.

—Gen. Peixotou, the new Brazilian president, is a soldier-like man, past the middle age, of dark or swarthy complexion, and wearing his gray hair close cut. Courteous and pleasing in manner, he it courteous and nervously polite, and has a good sympathetic voice. As a soldier his record has been respectable rather than brilliant.

—Prince Max, the third son of Prince George of Saxony, nephew of the king, recently passed a brilliant examination at the university of Leipzig, and received the title of LL.D. As usual at German universities, the examination took place in the presence of various faculties, any member of which was privileged to ask the young candidate questions.

—The Browning society of Boston holds interpretation meetings, in which attempts are made to fathom the depths and pierce the mysteries of the British poet, who is admired by the highly-cultured children of the Hub, masculine and feminine, of various colors and all ages, whether living on Beacon street or at the Back bay or elsewhere.

—One odd experience in the life of Sir Edwin Arnold seems not yet to have been brought out in the course of his visit to New York. To win a wager made by a lady he climbed thirteen thousand feet to the top of Fuji San, in Japan, and wrote on the edge of its crater a picturesque poem of ninety-two lines. Few poets ever attain to greater heights than this even in imagination.

—Experts are predicting that the books of to-day will fall to pieces before the middle of the next century. The paper in the books that have survived two or three centuries was made by hand of honest rags and without the use of strong chemicals, while the ink was made of nut galls. To-day much of the paper for books is made, at least in part, of wood pulp treated with powerful acids, while the ink is a compound of various substances naturally at war with the flimsy paper upon which it is laid.

—Maj. William Dickey, known in Aroostook county as "the duke of Fort Kent," is one of the most picturesque figures among the pioneers and politicians of Maine. He is about eighty years of age, but straight as an arrow and very active in the cause of the people of his district, whom he has often ably represented in the legislature. He lives in the barracks which were erected at Fort Kent by the government at the time of the Aroostook war, having purchased the property and fitted it up as a homestead.

—Difficult to Answer.—Miss Prue—"Why do you give everybody kisses?" Miss Rapidde—"Well, what's the use of keeping?"—Demorest's Magazine.

—Making an Appointment—"John," said the wife of the dying man, "here is Dr. Parsonberry come over to talk to you." "Tell him I'll see him at the funeral," gasped John.—N. Y. Sun.

—Wife—"Harry, I never thought you could change so. You used to say that you might search the world over, and never could find a woman equal to me, and now you are scarcely ever at home." Husband—"Oh, that's all right, dear; I'm simply making the search now, to prove the correctness of my assertion."

—First American Girl—"How much did your father offer to pay the duke?" Second Ditto—Ten thousand dollars a year. He said, however, he wasn't looking for money. What do you think of that?" First Ditto—"Think! Why he's no duke. I'll wager a box of candy that he's nothing but a vile adventurer."—Harper's Bazar.

Right in the public street?" Brown—"Perhaps I ought to say it was a horse-car conductor." Gray—"Oh, well, then, it's no consequence. Of course he didn't see her, so there's no harm done."—Boston Transcript.

—A certain clergyman of Halifax, Nova Scotia, while addressing his congregation on the subject of the Prodigal Son, is said to have affected his hearers even more than he anticipated when, with tears in his eyes and pathos in his voice, he pictured the aged father overjoyed, at the return of his long-lost boy, commanding them to bring forth and kill the little calf which had been fattened for years and years and years.

AGRICULTURAL HINTS.

GOOD CHAFF HIVE.

A Matter of Utmost Importance to Beekeepers.

A good, durable, cheap hive can be constructed on the following plan. We use a square frame, and by using nine frames to the hive, 1⅝ inches from center to center of each frame, the brood nest is almost square. We prefer a square chaff hive for this frame. A square hive is more convenient, as it will always go together without any readjusting of the different parts.

The first story (Fig. 1) is 24 inches square on the outside. The brood nest is 12 inches wide and 22 inches long, which is to be contracted by division boards to suit the size of the colony. This gives 4 inches of chaff at each side, and 2 inches or more at the ends, if the colony is contracted as it should be. In running for comb honey, as most farmers do, the second story (Fig. 2) should be 6 inches deep and the cover (Fig. 3) 3 inches deep. This gives ample room for two cases of one-pound sections, and also makes a very neat hive. The rabbets in the first story which supports the frames, should be exactly as deep as the top-bars if your frames are thick.

The second story is 25¼ inches square with ⅞-inch square rabbet cut out so as to fit over the first story and turn the rain. The cover is 26¼ inches square with ⅞-inch rabbet taken out, so as to fit over the second story. The ⅜ inch in the second story and cover is given for "play," so no two parts of the hive will bind. The hive is made of inch lumber, except the roof, which is ⅝ inch, second-class stuff, covered with tin. The tin should project well over the edge of the roof so as to turn every drop of water. Pine lumber is much the best for hives. It does not shrink and warp like poplar, and the cost is about the same. We prefer to have the lumber dressed and cut out at the planing mill, and have everything exactly true. It costs only about 25 cents per hive to have the lumber cut, and almost anybody can put it together.

By furnishing the bottom boards, the two pieces that make the brood chamber, the roof, and the nailing it together ourselves the hive cost only $1.05. The cost of material bought is as follows:

15 feet of pine lumber for sides of hive at 2 cents per ft	30 cents
Cutting	25 "
Tin Cover	35 "
Paint	10 "
Nails	5 "
Total cost	$1.05

This is much cheaper than paying $3 for a hive at the factory, besides freight charges. It will cost a little more in proportion to have one or two hives cut than several, as they charge for the time of setting the machinery.—E. S. Mead, in Ohio Farmer.

HUSBANDRY OF HUMUS.

How to Keep Soil Friable and Capable of Bearing Good Crops.

Soil is productive largely in proportion to the humus it contains. Humus gives friability, a condition requisite for best growth of plants. When it is absent the soil settles in a compact mass, through which the air cannot circulate. It is rare for soil of new land to become so compacted unless trodden upon much when wet. The humus which nature supplies by decay of vegetation, together with its office as a mulch, keeps new soil friable. The soil is exhausted of its humus by too much cropping without returning an equivalent. There are but two ways to restore this exhausted humus; one by carting on barnyard manure, the other by manuring with green crops. The former can be done only to a limited extent, because so little of the manure can be made; but there is scarcely a limit to the extent to which green manuring might be carried, particularly in warmer climates. Much of barn manure is coarse, a large portion of it is liable to be dry, unless well made. Turn this under in spring for a crop of corn, for instance, and if the weather be dry there will not be enough moisture to set the machinery of nature's laboratory at work to put it in condition for assimilation by growing plants; hence a good part of it is likely to lie inert in the earth. When the field is plowed again this is turned up, and if exposed long much of the substance of it is dissipated in the atmosphere; but in fertilizing by plowing down green crops, full as they are of moisture, decomposition begins at once, especially in hot weather, to prepare them for plant food.—Galen Wilson, in N. Y. Tribune.

KEEP the potatoes in a dry, dark, cool place, and place the seed intended for next year's crop in a separate place from the potatoes intended for use. Examine the seed and throw out any tubers indicating the slightest trace of disease.

EXTREME thirst, greenish discharges and a drooping appearance indicate cholera.

WORK FOR WINTER.

Things That Can Be Done to Advantage in Cold Weather.

One of the principal items of work that can be done to good advantage during the winter is hauling out and applying the manure. During the winter is the best time to make manure, and the most economical plan is to haul out as fast as made, applying direct on the fields. There is more time than can be spared for doing this from now until spring than there will be again until the season's work is finished up.

Manure may be applied during the winter on land that has been plowed in the fall preparatory to planting in the spring or on grass land, either pasture or meadow. Applied during the winter the rain and snow will carry the soluble parts into the soil and the growing plants will derive the benefit in the spring. Of course when applied fresh the first crop will derive the full benefit because so much of the fertilizer will not be in a soluble condition, but considering the economy of handling this plan will be found a good one.

When there is snow on the ground a sled can be used to good advantage, as it will be less work to load and unload than with a wagon. Care should be taken to scatter as evenly as possible, and it is better to manure thoroughly rather than to scatter thinly over a large surface.

On most farms during the winter is a good time to get up the season's supply of wood. There is so much to be done after the season's work fairly opens that everything that can be done in advance will be so much saved. All things considered, the cheapest wood is that cut green and piled up under shelter and allowed to get dry before using. This is especially the case with what is needed in the kitchen. At least a supply to last until after harvest should be laid in, and it will do no harm to have a supply that will last all through the season.

Pruning can be done whenever there is a thaw. It is not a good plan to prune trees or plants of any kind when the limbs are frozen. The brush should all be gathered up clean and burned after the pruning is finished. Getting this work done during the winter will save just so much time in the spring with the additional advantage that many insect pests that prey upon the fruit and trees will be destroyed.

The planning of the season's work can be done in winter, the acreage that is to be devoted to each crop and in what fields the different crops shall be planted. In doing this, so far as is possible, a good system of rotation should be planned and carried out, so as to use all the elements of fertility in the soil to the best advantage. After the acreage for each crop is determined the seed can be procured in good season, so as to have it on hand when wanted. By having the plan of work all laid out and the seed needed on hand there need be no delay in pushing the work when the season opens, and being able to push the work will be an advantage.—St. Louis Republic.

TO PREVENT EGG-EATING.

A Nest That Is Sure to Cure the Most Vicious of Hens.

A hen cannot eat the eggs in her nest unless she has advantages for so doing. The illustration is no novelty, but it shows how to prepare a nest to prevent egg-eating by the hen. A hen can only indulge her propensity when she stands by the eggs; hence, open nests, close to the floor, permit her to do her work of damage. An ordinary soap-box will answer as a nest-box, the top, sides, ends and bottom not being removed. An opening in front, only sufficient for the hen to go in, should be made, and the nest-box should be raised to the height of ten inches from the floor to the bottom of the nest-box. A ledge (A) may be placed in front of the opening, to permit the hen to enter the nest, but it should not be over two inches wide. Legs, blocks or bricks may be used to keep the nest-box off the floor. The box should be in a rather dark place. When the hen has laid, she will not attempt to eat the eggs in the box, but will come off to the ground to do so, where she will be foiled, as she cannot then reach the eggs.—Farm and Fireside.

Exercise for Cows.

To expect the cow to thrive without exercise is to demand from her that which would not be expected from other stock. Exercise promotes the appetite, thus enabling the cow to consume more food, which is converted into milk. Close confinement in the stalls in the winter must sooner or later affect the health of the cows. A covered open shed, or a large yard, will be of advantage. It will do the cows no harm to have the run of the fields in dry weather, even if they secure no food therefrom.

Roosts and Lameness.

It is as well to have the roost only six inches above the platform as to have it higher. Many fowls become lame from the constant strain upon them in daily getting on and off the roosts, which lameness does not only cause the bird to droop, but renders it unprofitable. Bumblefoot is also caused by high roosts, and stiffness of the joints, which is ascribed to rheumatism, arises from the same source. Low roosts are better, and can be made at less cost.—Farm and Fireside.

Manure as a Fertilizer.

Manure is not always a complete fertilizer. It may be lacking in some important element and contain an excess of another. If it has been exposed to the rains, so as to permit of its being leached, it will have lost much of its nitrogen. The quality of the food also affects the quality of the manure. Instead of manure being a complete fertilizer for plants it is really one of the most variable substances produced or used on the farm.

SOMEBODY says that poets are declining. This may be so, but you had better not ask a poet what he will take on the strength of it.—Boston Bulletin.

All gone—woman's suffering and woman's weakness. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription puts a stop to it. It's a remedy for all the delicate derangements and disorders that make her suffer, and a cure for all the diseases and disturbances that make her weak. It's a legitimate medicine, that corrects and cures; a tonic that invigorates and builds up; a nervine that soothes and strengthens. For bearing-down pains, displacements, all the functional irregularities peculiar to the sex, it's a safe and certain remedy.

Other medicines claim to cure? That's true. But they don't claim to do this: if the Favorite Prescription fails to give satisfaction, in any case for which it's recommended, the money paid for it is refunded.

Asthma.

"I have been a great sufferer from Asthma and severe Colds every Winter, and last Fall my friends as well as myself thought because of my feeble condition, and great distress from constant coughing, and inability to raise any of the accumulated matter from my lungs, that my time was close at hand. When nearly worn out for want of sleep and rest, a friend recommended me to try thy valuable medicine, Boschee's German Syrup. I am confident it saved my life. Almost the first dose gave me great relief and a gentle refreshing sleep, such as I had not had for weeks. My cough began immediately to loosen and pass away, and I found myself rapidly gaining in health and weight. I am pleased to inform thee—unsolicited—that I am in excellent health and do certainly attribute it to thy Boschee's German Syrup. C. B. STICKNEY, Picton, Ontario."

John says he, by main strength succeeded in extricating himself from the balance of the empty beer kegs and crawled out from under the box considerably bruised and frightened but not much the worse for the catastrophe. He hired a team to bring him and his load home, where he found that the big blacks had arrived in 45 minutes after leaving him. Had those beer kegs been full there is no telling what would have become of John.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

The earliest settlements made on and about the north shore of Lake Minnetonka were as follows: O. E. Garrison and A. B. Robinson settled on the present site of Wayzata in the winter of 1852 3, John Bourgeois settled on the east shore of Wayzata Bay on a spot known as "Bourgeois mound." He remained there only during winter. Garrison and Robinson were permanent settlers and were soon followed by others, whose names and locations are;

Mr Robinson, sw ¼ Sec 5 Minnetonka Township, Joseph Wilson, know as "Scotch Joe," sw ¼ Sec 32 Plymouth Township, two brothers named Freeman, in Sec 32 and 33 on South line Plymouth, O. E. Garrison's house was a tamarack log structure erected where the Maurer Hotel now stands, and A. B. Robinson's was on the high ground on shore east of the Wayzata R. R. Station, O. E. Garrison found his way from St Anthony's falls (Minneapolis) by following a road or trail running by Crystal Lake, from the latter point he cut his way through brush enabling him to reach the place of his future settlement with an ox team which was the first road opened to the north shore of Lake Minnetonka, part of which is the present location of the south Watertown road in Plymouth.

John Carman of Ohio with some members of his family settled on the peninsula now known as Spring Park in 1853; this was the earliest settlement within the Township of Orono.

Carman after establishing himself on the peninsula, selected several tracts on the north shore as future homes for other members of his family still remaining in Ohio. William B. Harrington of Trumbul county Ohio, and family, after a temporary residence at Minnetonka City settled on the north shore of Wayzata Bay, making a claim of the land which now constitutes F. C. Pillsbury's Stock Farm and on which the summer residences of the Pillsbury's, Sidles, Lorings and others are located. He was followed in 1854 by his brother John S. Harrington who settled on land adjoining on the south where he still resides.

In 1854 James and Francis Maxwell arrived at Wayzata. A few days later O. E. Garrison and the Maxwells explored the country between Wayzata and Long Lake travelling near the present rout of the south Watertown road, being guided by information received from one of Shakopees band of Indians, who previous to their setting out, drew a diagram of the country on the ground with a stick, delineating lakes, streams, marshes and hills, which the explorers in their travels found to be correct and of great service. They extended their explorations beyond Long Lake to Maxwells Bay, [the Indian name being Wiopeagia] where the Maxwels marked claims, where they a few days later erected cabins and began settlements. They were soon followed by Kelsey Hinman who settled on the Graves and Teas land, and by Asa Kelley who settled the tract now owned by William G. White. On July 4th 1854 James and Francis Maxwell, Kelsey Hinman and Asa Kelly set out on an exploring tour. Starting at Maxwell's bay and travelling in a northerly direction they followed an Indian trail for some distance, they found an Indian canoe on dry land which they took for an indication that a body of water existed near by and upon advancing a short distance their surmise was confirmed. The trail led them to a large silvery sheet of water, which they, in their ardour and patriotism named "Lake Independence." They found an abandoned Winnebago tent on the shore of the lake. They continued their explorations around the south shore of the lake and along the southerly border of marshy lands along the out-let of the lake, Pioneer creek found the stream entering hard ground through which it passed with a rapids, the scene at this point (now R. M. Mills farm) awakened further enthusiasm in the minds of the explorers, in the contemplation of a future water power. Having discovered a lake, a stream of water and a water power and having honored the day (July 4th) by giving its name to one of the objects discovered, was glory enough for one day. They returned at eve to their domicils on Maxwell bay.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. DELANO DIARY.

—Fairday to-morrow January 9th.

—Hurrah for General Jackson to-day!

—Jess Brandon is occupying the old bank building now.

—"Duke" Hanseman is nursing a horse kick, this week.

—The doctors have been kept uncommonly busy for the past week.

—N. K. Coffin and Geo. Goodrich are arranging the new scenery in the city hall this week.

—The Catholic society is to have an entertainment in the city hall on the 20th inst.

—Rev. Davies attended the funeral of Mrs. Ditty, daughter of W. C. Haskel, of Maple Plain, on Thursday.

—Mrs. Sarunk, of Hanover, aged 68 years died on Wednesday, last. She was one of the old settlers of Crow River Valley.

—The Delano Cemetery Association will hold their annual election at Maxfield's office at 7:30 P. M. on Friday, January, 29.

—Rev. J. R. Davies will preach at the M. E. church on Sunday evening January 17th from the text, "I am my brother's keeper."

—Mrs. Adicks, wife of Fred Adicks, Sr. died this morning. We are informed that her funeral will be held in the Shrader church, on Sunday at 2 P. M.

—A meeting of the school board to morrow night at the city hall. These meetings are said to be becoming two sided and decidedly interesting.

—Sam Pape has not yet returned from the west and a new "kid" is operating the wires at night while Mr. Mattson holds down Sam's place.

—Baron VonKruger was seen steering for the suburbs the other day with his rations strapped to his back. He said he was going to "make wood."

—The probabilities are that the school board will construct a few rods of fence or build a new privy on the school premises. One or both are much needed.

—Mumps is claiming the attention of several of our citizens. It is claimed that Prof. Bartlett brought them up from the city, and circumstances favor that theory.

—Timothy Gleeson says he swore off on New Year's day from drinking and smoking just in time. On Wednesday he smiled even broader than before on the arrival of his daughter.

—Hon. B. F. Christleib, of Long Lake made us a pleasant visit on Thursday. He is looking up points for his "Historical Facts" which is being published in the GAZETTE each week.

—From the St. Peter Tribune we learn that Rev. Thomas Gunn of Montsose, will preach on Sunday evening in the M. E. church at that place. He was in charge of that circuit years ago.

—Marcus R. Coffin, a delegate to the State Alliance Convention at Minneapolis, visited his brother Newton and other friends here this week. Mr. C. is one of Nicollet County's old and substantial farmers.

—Scarlet fever has made its appearance again, this time in the home of A. Teichnor his son John and daughter Anna, both having had it. The chairman of the town supervisors, Stein, promptly quarintined the premises.

—The remains of Levi Halgren, of Watertown, were brought home on Wednesday, from the pineries where he met his death by being struck on the head by a falling limb. A number of his relatives and friends from Minneapolis came up to attend the funeral which will be held at 2 p. m. on Saturday.

—Depot agent Bolton is getting to be an expert beer keg hustler. The large number of empties left for him to load developes this acquirement. The kegs piled up around the depot occasionally does not represent the consumption of Delano alone but that of the niegbboring villages and country. As for George he is not even suspected of indulging in the least.

—Esquire Otis L. Billings on Tuesday evening began his 43rd year of life on this terrestrial sphere and his wife arranged a surprise for him in the way of a birthday party at which the Delano Cornet Band of which the squire is a member and a few chosen friends were present. The friends hung a fine lamp in the house as a token of their appreciation of the occasion as well as to light the squire and his numerous family on their journey through life. He also received some fine sleigh bells.

—Dr. Brigham of Montrose, was in town to-day on professional business.

—Mr. Woodard of Montrose died this morning at the age of 86, of the prevailing complaint.

—On Saturday while coming down the hill this side of Watertown with a load of empty beer kegs, that big black team that John Lohmiller drives got up a little too much speed to suit the driver and as he sought to turn them into the middle of the road, capsized the sleds. John says he, by main strength succeeded in extricating himself from the balance of the empty beer kegs and crawled out from under the box considerably bruised and frightened but not much the worse for the catastrophe. He hired a team to bring him and his load home, where he found that the big blacks had arrived in 45 minutes after leaving him. Had those beer kegs been full there is no telling what would have become of John.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

The earliest settlements made on and about the north shore of Lake Minnetonka were as follows: O. E. Garrison and A. B. Robinson settled on the present site of Wayzata in the winter of 1852-3, John Bourgeois settled on the east shore of Wayzata Bay on a spot known as "Bourgeois mound." He remained there only during winter. Garrison and Robinson were permanent settlers and were soon followed by others, whose names and locations are:

Mr Robinson, sw ¼ Sec 5 Minnetonka Township, Joseph Wilson, know as "Scotch Joe," sw ¼ Sec 32 Plymouth Township, two brothers named Freeman, in Sec 32 and 33 on South line Plymouth, O. E. Garrison's house was a tamarack log structure erected where the Maurer Hotel now stands, and A. B. Robinson's was on the high ground on shore east of the Wayzata R. R. Station, O. E. Garrison found his way from St Anthony's falls (Minneapolis) by following a road or trail running by Crystal Lake, from the latter point he cut his way through brush enabling him to reach the place of his future settlement with an ox team which was the first road opened to the north shore of Lake Minnetonka, part of which is the present location of the south Watertown road in Plymouth.

John Carman of Ohio with some members of his family settled on the peninsula now known as Spring Park in 1853; this was the earliest settlement within the Township of Orono.

Carman after establishing himself on the peninsula, selected several tracts on the north shore as future homes for other members of his family still remaining in Ohio. William B. Harrington of Trumbul county Ohio, and family, after a temporary residence at Minnetonka City settled on the north shore of Wayzata Bay, making a claim of the land which now constitutes F. C. Pillsbury's Stock Farm and on which the summer residences of the Pillsbury's, Sidles, Lorings and others are located. He was followed in 1854 by his brother John S. Harrington who settled on land adjoining on the south where he still resides.

In 1854 James and Francis Maxwell arrived at Wayzata. A few days later O. E. Garrison and the Maxwells explored the country between Wayzata and Long Lake travelling near the present rout of the south Watertown road, being guided by information received from one of Shakopees band of Indians, who previous to their setting out, drew a diagram of the country on the ground with a stick, delineating lakes, streams, marshes and hills, which the explorers in their travels found to be correct and of great service. They extended their explorations beyond Long Lake to Maxwells Bay, [the Indian name being Wiopeagta] where the Maxwels marked claims, where they a few days later erected cabins and began settlements. They were soon followed by Kelsey Hinman who settled on the Graves and Teas land, and by Asa Kelley who settled the tract now owned by William G. White. On July 4th 1854 James and Francis Maxwell, Kelsey Hinman and Asa Kelly set out on an exploring tour. Starting at Maxwell's bay and travelling in a northerly direction they followed an Indian trail for some distance, they found an Indian canoe on dry land which they took for an indication that a body of water existed near by and upon advancing a short distance their surmise was confirmed. The trail led them to a large silvery sheet of water, which they, in their ardour and patriotism named "Lake Independence." They found an abandoned Winnebago tent on the shore of the lake. They continued their explorations around the south shore of the lake and along the southerly border of marshy lands along the out-let of the lake, Pioneer creek found the stream entering hard ground through which it passed with a rapids, the scene at this point (now R. M. Mills farm) awakened further enthusiasm in the minds of the explorers, in the contemplation of a future water power. Having discovered a lake, a stream of water and a water power and having honored the day (July 4th) by giving its name to one of the objects discovered, was glory enough for one day. They returned at eve to their domicils on Maxwell bay.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

"A Tariff on Coffee is a Tax, Unquestionably."—Senator C. K. Davis at Buffalo.

If tariff on coffee is a tax, tariff on sugar is a tax, tariff on tin is a tax, tariff on knives and pearl buttons and tariff on anything that has to be paid is tax. If you smuggle goods the tariff may be escaped, but that does not destroy the truth that TARIFF IS A TAX.

CARDINAL MANNING died in London at 8:20, A. M. Jan 14.

IT is said that John L. Sulivan has signed the pledge and gone to work with Murphy to reclaime the fallen.

THE Democrats of Minnesota left in force for Washington where headquarters will be established to-day for the convention work.

FOR several years it has been the fashion for political parties to select a New York man for Presidential or Vice Presidential Canidate. It seems to us it would be a good thing for the balance of the country if things were to be changed this year and the candidates be selected on their merits rather than their geographical location.

BILL OR LITTLE BILLS.

There seems a disposition in some quarters to confuse the subject of tariff reform by assuming that the advocates of a general revision of the tariff will oppose the introduction of seperate bills or generall bills? It makes little difference which method we adopt, if all the bills are of the right character. The country expects the Democrats to do something, or to try to do something. To put the question aside and fight the campaign of 1892 on the issues as already defined is out of the question. To adopt Governor Hill's proposition merely to reperl or to offer to repeal, the McKinley bill, and go back to the iniquity of 1883, which for nine years the party has been denouncing, is preposterous.

To adopt a bill to put wool on the free list and leave the rest of the woolen schedule unchanged, would be suicidal. The Democratic party was not given control of the House merely to increase the privileges of the favored classes.

Any bill, special or general, which enlarges the free list by the addition of raw materials, must at the same time provide for a corresponding reduction in the tariff on the finished articles into which these crude materials enter.

The sincerity of the men who are demanding a seperate bill for free wool can weel be tested by adding a simple provssion to such a bill, reducing to a uniform duty of 35 per cent the tariff on all worsted and woolens and on all manufactures of wool. Such a bill could be framed in a day, and might be condensed into half a dogen lines. It would be clear and easily underrtood. The issues it presented could not be confused Further, it would eliminate from the general bill the complex woolen schedule and make the formation of the general bill easier.

It is a matter of no concern to the Courier-Journal which method of reform is adopted, but the demand from the people is that the bill shall be a genuine reform bill, and not a sham and a fraud.

Any measure putting crude materials on the free list and leaving undisturbed the finished article would be a fraud so transparent that it could not deceive any one.—Courier-Journal.

Delegate E. Hoisington reports that the Alliance Convention held at Minneapolis last week had a "heavenly setting together."

Independence was not largely represented at Delano Stock Fair on last Saturday. Too cold.

The most laughable to come under our observation for sometime is the following: (whether it is given as straight goods or fiction could not say) Handed down from the Supreme court at Dover New Hampshire, Dec, 23rd 1891. It seems one Mody Morse sold to William Butler a house and some land for $1,700, part cash and part in notes, it being stated that the house was in good condition, but finally the ghosts drove Buttler out. (it seems the house was haunted) and Butler refused to pay a note of $300 yet due. The owner sued him but the Supreme Court decided that selling a haunted house as being in good condition was fraud, and declared the note forfeited, and now Butler owns house, Spooks and all. Under such ruling from the highest court of one of the New England States seems they are in need of more light, and it seems too bad, also to take up a penny collection Sabbath after Sabbath in order to get money to send Missionaries to the heathen when they are greatly in need of missionaries at home. The representatives of such a court would make splendid canned goods for the cannibals. It is strange that many people yet, in this enlightened age of the world believe in transmigration from dead bodies into living or moving Spooks. Too many people believe strongly in the writings of Socraties, Plato and other heathen philosophers.

GETTING DRY IN GEORGIA.

The Number of Saloons In Atlanta Agusta and Savannah Decreasing.

Atlanta, Ga., Jan. 2 -(Special)- New Years day brings increasing hard times to the liquor sellers in Georgia. While the straight Prohibitionists were defeated in the late election in Atlanta, the successful party is so stringent that there is no money in the buisness, and on Monday next about twenty-five saloons will be licensed, where there used to be 289. The two great strongholds of the liquor buisness in Georgia are Savanah and Augusta. In these cities, no man stood a chance for preferment who was not indorsed by the liquor men of his ward. One year ago an Irish Catholic, named J. McDonogh was run in for Mayor of Savanah. To the surprise of every one he developed into an ardent Law and Order man. He enforced the Sunday law vigorously, imposing the heaviest fines on those brought before him, and kept his former friends in hot water all the way through.

In the granting of new licenses today, fifty saloon keepers dropped out of the buisness. His tightening of the reins bids fair in the remaining year which McDonogh has to serve to throughly cripple the saloons.

In Augusta, the bar-room men kept Robt H. Mays in the Mayors chair for seventeen years. He was as true to them as they were to him, and every saloon keeper felt safe that Uncle Rob would remit the fines imposed on them. Sunday liquor selling was notorious. This year, however, Uncle Rob, as the boys in the bar-rooms call him, was knocked out. The sale of liquor was allowed to-day by the retiring Council, but from henceforth the law will be applied by Mayor Alexander, the new incumbent, and the saloons will be reduced by one half. Through the operation of the Local Option Law, two new counties. Hall and Dooly, were to-day added to the list of dry counties.

Tariff Pictures.

"The 'carpet tax' liar has been singing small lately. No wonder. Every time he shows his head a fact like this hits it. An Eighth avenue firm sells Axminster and Moquette carpets at a yard. That is less than the duty, which is 60 cents a square yard and 40 per cent. ad valorem. Carpet is generally a little more than a yard wide; but letting it go at that, the duty on these goods is at least a yard. And yet the Millses and other free trade cranks are getting ready to shout in the year 1892 the tariff is a tax.'"—New York Press.

79 cents

91 cents

Of course no one believes that these carpets were ever made in the places their names would indicate.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8, 1892.

Speaker protempore McMillin, who was elected without opposition to preside over the House until Speaker Crisp who is still confined to his room by the grip, shall be able to resume his duties, presides like a veteran, and is complimented on all sides for the ease with which he has taken up the onerous duties of presiding over the House.

Notwithstanding the unprecedented appropriations of the billion dollar Congress, the cry for deficiency appropriations has already begun. The list is headed by Porter, of the census bureau, who, through the Treasury department has asked for a deficiency appropriation of $1,000,000, to complete the work of that bureau, and there are those who doubt wether that amount will be sufficient, if Porter is to be allowed to do it in his own way. He may get the money, but it is not certain; and in any event he will probably be asked some puzzling questions as to how he has spent some of the $6,400,000 previously appropriated for the Census.

The attacks on McKinley tariff law in the House resemble the firing of sharp-shooters. Bills have been introduced placing the following articles on the free list: Jute, jute bagging, iron ties, binding twine, lumber, tin plate, salt, agricultural implements, wool, coal and iron ore! and bills have been introduced to repeal the sugar bounty clause of the law, and so much of the reciprocity clause as gives the President authority to restore the duty upon certain products of countries which fail to make reciprocity treaties with the United States. These bills will all go to the Ways and Means committee, which will decide which of them shall be pressed.

Representative Mills, who has gone to Texas, has been granted an indefinite leave of absence by the House. The principal object of Mr. Mills in going home at this time is to regain his health, but it is probable that while there he may do some talking about the Texas Senatorship.

A meeting of the Executive committee of the National Association of Democratic Clubs has been called for Jan. 20, by Representative W. L. Wilson, of West Virginia, who is chairman of the committee, and it is desired that every member shall be present or represented by proxy, as important matters will be considered.

The Democratic vacancy on the Interstate Commerce Commission has been given to Judge W. M. Lindsey, of Kentucky, a gentleman of whom nothing but good is known, and the Republican vacancy to J. W. McDill, of Iowa, who has been Congressman, Senator, Judge and several other things with official salaries. Col. W. R. Morrison, whose commission expires Dec, 31, has been re-appointed.

The silver question has already shown a ready disposition to bob up serenly in Congress at any and all times. Several bills have been introduced in the Senate only one "bill" day in the House, four bills of the same sort were introduced, besides several others having a more or less direct bearing on silver. One of them provides for the repeal of the purchasing clause of the present silver law. Senator Stewart maintains that there is a law already in existence authorizing the free coinage of silver, enacted in 1837 and never repealed, and he offered a resolution instructing the Judiciary committee to inquire into matter and report whether he is right or wrong. Senator Morrill delivered a very able and conservative speech this week against the unlimited free coinage of silver, in answer to Senator Stewart's recent speech.

The Harrison men are shouting "I told you so" because of a slight attack of nausea that Mr. Blaine had this week, and the present indications are that a concerted attempt is to be made to drive Mr. Blaine from the presidential field, using his health as the principal weapon. It may succeed too as Mr. Blaine is a monomaniac on that subject, and has been ever since that notorious sunstroke, away back in the seventies.

Andrew Jacksons birthday is being fitly celebrated today by the local Democrats.

A joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to charter a vessel to carry the grain which has been contributed for the famine-stricken Russians to that country, was adopted by the Senate, but defeated by the House. The constitutionality of the resolution was doubted by some of the ablest Democrats in Congress.

Senator Morgan spoke yesterday in favor of his resolution directing the Committee on Foreign Affairs to procure additional information concerning the Nicaragua canal. He strongly favors the guarantee of bonds asked for by the company, but unless there is a change of sentiment there is no probability of the bill passing the House. As one prominent member of that body puts it: "I favor the building of the canal by this Government if necessary, but am opposed to any guarantee of bonds issued by a private corporation."

Briefly Told.

Half of the fresh water on the earth is found within a radius of 1,000 miles of St. Paul and Minneapolis.

The Great Northern in a run of 1,074 miles from St. Paul to Great Falls, Mont., has no grade of over .06 per cent, or 31.6 feet per mile, giving it the longest stretch of low grade track in the world.

Montana leades all the States in the production of precious metals.

Great Falls, Mont., has the largest water power in this country. The Missouri river tumbles 512 feet over a series of falls in a course of eight miles.

The best hunting and fishing resorts in the North West are to be found along the lines of the Great Northern Railway.

The Great Northern is one of the very few railways in the United States owning and operating its own entire equipment.

The Great Northern, with four tracks, is the main thoroughfare between St. Paul and Minneapolis; has the only double track to Lake Minnetonka.

The new extension of the Great Northern to Park Rapids, Minn., 200 miles from St. Paul, comes within about 25 miles of Lake Itaska, the source of the Mississippi.

Minnesota has more water surface and the largest body of standing white pine timber of any State in the Union.

A Splendid Trip.

A trip to Montana over the Great Northern is one of the most attractive in the West. From St. Paul the journey takes the four-track route to Minneapolis. Crossing the Mississippi on a million dollar stone arch bridge, in full view of the Falls of St. Anthony and the largest flouring mills in the world, goes thence through the Park Region of Minnesota, with its myriad lakes, to the wheat valley of the Red River, to Devils Lake,—North Dakota's inland sea,—through the Mouse River country and the Milk River Valley, passing Fort Assiniboine, the largest and finest military fort in the West, historic Benton, Great Falls City and the mighty cataracts of the Missouri river, then skirting the Rocky Mountains, with their sublime scenery, to Helena, the rich capital of Montana, thence over the continental backbone to Butte, the largest mining camp on earth.

Apples for Export.

The merits of the American apple are doubtless exceedingly appreciated abroad, since the buisness of exporting apples from this country to Europe, though of comparatively recent growth, is yearly becoming more important. Up to November 7, steamers from American ports had carried to the United Kingdom about 555,000 barrels of apples since the season began. Glasgow took 148,000 barrels, and London 49,778; but the most went to Liverpool. The freight to Liverpool is about 75 cents a barrel, which, with the low prices prevailing here, makes the business a profitable one to exporters. The first week of November, New York shipped 17,140 barrels, Boston 20,842 barrels, and Montreal 41,000 barrels, a total of 18,982 barrels, against 18,250 barrels for the same week last year. The varieties sent abroad are pippins, kings, greenings, and snows.—Demorests Magazine.

adopted by Gordon Granger Post, No. 120, Maple Plain, Grand Army of the Republic, at a regular meeting of the Post, Saturday afternoon Dec. 26, 1891, on the death of Comrade Francis McCullough's wife.

ETIQUETTE has settled it that a proposal of marriage should not be sent by letter. This is right and lawful for different reasons, and particularly so that marriage is a lottery, and nothing pertaining to a lottery can go through the mails.

THE life insurance companies will make an experiment this year—at least so far as American companies are concerned—the outcome of which will be looked for with interest. It is a practical limitation of the amount of risks to be taken. Anything that tends to make policy-holders more secure is a move in the right direction.

CHINA, it seems, is now settling up for the recent killing of white missionaries. She has already paid out $500,000 because of this sanguinary amusement, and other claims are pending. A little more law in the first place would have been cheaper, if economy is any object. It would also have been more generally satisfactory among the "heathen dogs."

IT is reported that the plan to enlist Indian soldiers, originating with ex-Secretary of War Proctor, has been abundantly successful. A report from Maj. Schwan, of the adjutant general's office, gives excellent accounts of the copper-colored recruits, and says that their appearance, behavior and aptitude for military training are remarkable. Well, it is consoling to know that the Indians are good for something besides to devour rations.

A SUGGESTION has been made that to every passenger train be attached a cheap rear car holding freight for ballast, so that if another train runs into it, the loss will not be great. To be effective there would need to be two such "calamity" cars, one at either end, and even then passengers would always be in danger of a rough shaking up. The better way would be to employ more careful men, and hold careless ones to stricter account.

CONGRESSMAN CRAIN, of Texas, says: "Garza, the Mexican revolutionist who is creating such a stir along the Rio Grande, is one of the gamest men I ever met. He looks the typical frontier desperado, yet he is not a rude, illiterate fellow, as some might imagine. He is fairly well educated, and prior to his late bold break was running a small newspaper, printed on the Texas side in the Spanish language. Garza has been in countless private brawls and is a lucky fellow to be alive, for he has been pierced by many bullets."

IMMIGRATION is still increas'ng, and most among the least desirable classes. A report of the bureau of statistics shows, it is true, for the month ended November 30 a loss, as compared with the corresponding month in 1890, of 1,528; but the total for the eleven months of 1891 exceeds that of the similar period last year by 93,764. An analysis of this large gain reveals the fact that 48,699, or nearly one-half of it, came from those countries in Europe which experience has proven to be the poorest nurseries of American citizenship—Bohemia, Hungary, Russia and Poland.

A PHILADELPHIA physician says that the long continued depression in the money market is due to the grip. "The mysterious disease," he says, "leaves an after effect upon the victim that continues for months and years after his apparent recovery. It returns from time to time with varying intensity, and throws the patient into a state of lethargy that utterly squelches all desire for work. Since that epidemic has touched a large number of those interested in the money market and financial affairs, I believe I am right in my explanation of the troublous condition of financial affairs at present."

THE cost of the British royalty is about $5,000,000 a year. In addition to the maintenance of palaces the prince of Wales has over $500,000 and the princess $50,000 a year. The younger sons of the queen have been voted $125,000, the daughters $30,000 each, the duke of Cambridge, the queen's cousin, $60,000, and his two sisters $25,000 and $15,000 respectively, and $500,000 goes to the Empress of Germany when she is married. The lord chamberlain and lord steward get $28,500 per year each, seven lords in waiting $3,500 each and the ladies of the bedchamber have $2,500 a year each.

Another Railway Disaster.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., Jan. 11.—Today the north-bound Monon train ran off the track about two miles north of here at Nicholson Crossing. The accident occurred on a fifty-foot embankment down which four cars rolled, the engine and one baggage car keeping the track. The trouble is supposed to be due to a broken rail. The first passenger coach rolled over three times. It was full of passengers and caught fire from the stove but all occupants escaped alive.

The baggage and express car went over, but no one in it was severely hurt. The ladies' coach was literally torn to pieces, as was also the parlor car. Here was the greatest damage. There was hardly a passenger on the train who escaped injury. Help was soon at hand, and in a few moments the road was full of the maimed on their way to town. There were three theatrical troops on board, one of which, the City Club Burlesque company, was completely broken up, nearly every member sustaining serious injuries.

CHILI SHUTS ITS EYE.

Way Devised to Escape the Refugee Difficulty—It Allows Them to Leave the Country and Thus Avoid a Possible Hitch in Peace Negotiations.

VALPARAISO, Jan. 11.—United States Minister Egan early Saturday morning left the American legation at Santiago, escorting Juan and William McKenna and Jose Carrera, three of the nine refugees who have been under his protection. They took a train for Valparaiso, and upon arrival here went without delay aboard the United States cruiser Yorktown. This action on Minister Egan's part, it is said, was taken with the tacit approval of the present Chilian government. There seems to be no doubt that the rest of the refugees will leave the legation under similar conditions at an early date. The Yorktown will probably sail to-day for Peru with the two McKennas. Carrera will sail to-day aboard the German steamer Abydos. Public opinion relative to these three refugees is that Chili is well rid of them. While President Montt and his cabinet would not grant them salvo conducto, nothing was done to prevent their leaving the American legation.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The news from Valparaiso that Minister Egan had escorted three of the Balmaceda refugees on board the Yorktown without molestation confirms what has been heretofore stated in these dispatches. President Harrison's administration gave its ultimatum on this point. The Chilian government had either to guarantee the safety of the refugees if given up for trial and to see that if convicted no sentence was inforced against them or else it had to take the responsibility for their safe conduct aboard an American vessel. It chose the latter course.

Officials here smile at the statement that President Montt's cabinet granted no safe conduct. They intimate that such talk is for home consumption, but they are not disposed to cavil so long as the refugees are not molested. It is expected that the remaining six will be in safety very soon. The result is a distinct diplomatic triumph for Minister Egan. He has done no more for the Balmacedists than he did for Pedro Montt, Matta and others of the insurgents, but powerful influences were set to work to keep him from doing this much. Minister Montt made a good many arguments to Secretary Blaine to secure the surrender of the refugees without conditions. When Minister Montt found he could make no impression on the government in Washington he so advised President Montt and the latter's cabinet gave up the fight.

The concession of the Montt government on this point is expected to remove one of the causes of irritation between the two countries. In the cablegrams that have been flying between Washington and Santiago for the last few days the intimations on both sides have been that such a course would tend to promote a better feeling on the part of the United States.

The question of the refugees is entirely distinct from the Valparaiso incident; its settlement does not in any manner lessen the responsibility of the Chilian authorities for the killing of the Baltimore sailors. But the Chilians believe that by yielding on this point they may secure further delay and time for more explanations in regard to the main trouble. Much of the diplomatic correspondence which the president intends to lay before congress relates to the refugees. Minister Egan's part of it is very spirited. The correspondence is ready to go to congress to-day, if necessary; but if a satisfactory solution could be found for the controversy concerning the refugees it may be assumed that the Baltimore incident, unpromising as the outlook is, may yet be cleared up to the satisfaction of the United States. At least the Chilians hope so, and are striving to ward off immediate action by President Harrison's administration.

A DEADLY BLAST.

Further Details of the Indian Territory Mine Explosion — Over Sixty Bodies Taken from the Fatal Shaft.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 11.—A telegram received from Superintendent Cameron, of the Osage mine at Krebs, says that all the bodies that have been found have been removed from the mine. There may be five or six more bodies under the heavy mass of slate which was dislodged by the explosion. The superintendent says he has six exploring parties at work.

The death list will prove a great deal smaller than first reported. The list now stands sixty-three dead and about one hundred injured.

It has been learned that the explosion was caused by George Lowery exploding what is known as a window shot. Fleming, the mining expert and former superintendent of the mine, but now general manager of the Southwest Coal and Improvement Company, of Colgate, I. T., says the men who fired the shot were to blame for the disaster, for they should not have fired until all the men were out of the mine. They fired the shot at 5:07 when they should have waited until 5:30. Had they done this there would have been only four or five men in the shaft and not more than four or five deaths would have resulted from the explosion.

The funerals of most of the victims whose bodies have been recovered were held Sunday. There were no religious services excepting in a few cases.

Blown Up by Dynamite.

BELLAIRE, O., Jan. 11.—Twenty sticks of dynamite were placed around a fire in a stone quarry near here, and, catching fire, the stuff exploded with terrific force. John Walters, John Smith and seven Italians were seriously injured, and some of them will not recover. A house near the quarry was blown to pieces.

OTTAWA, Ont., Jan. 11.—The dominion debt statement for October has been issued. On the 31st ult. Canada's national debt amounted to $236,033,213. This includes liabilities payable in England of $188,403,802.

A FIERCE CONFLICT.

A Bloodthirsty Mob Takes Possession of a Mexican Town—A Fight in Which Several Lives Are Lost.

DEMING, N. M., Jan. 11.—Couriers from Ascension, in the state of Chihuahua, 100 miles south, report a terrible uprising there Thursday. For some time bad feeling has existed between the adherents of the church party and the supporters of the Diaz government. Affairs reached a crisis Thusday when the election of the president of the town was held. Rafael Anchela, who had twice held the office, was reelected by a few votes. Anchela was distasteful to the opposition on account of his efforts to inaugurate reform and threats were openly made against his life.

About 4 o'clock in the afternoon a mob of over 100 men suddenly surrounded the city building and opened fire. Anchela and his secretary, N. Devalas, were instantly killed. The mob took possesion of the town after a hard fight with the friends of Anchela. During the battle three revolutionists were killed and many on both sides fatally wounded. France Sanzo, one of the leaders of the mob, was among the killed.

The impression prevails that this is a movement in support of Garza. The strength of the insurgents is reported at eighty armed men. Troops are ordered to the point of outbreak. In the meanwhile the town is in the possession of the mob and further bloodshed is expected.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Jan. 11.—The startling information has been brought here by J. C. Godfrey from Piedras Negras, Mex., that there is a general uprising in the states of Durango, Chihuahua, Coahulia and Sonora, and that the malcontents are well organized and will flock to the standard of Garza. He states that in parts of Chihuahua the poorer classes have already revolted and are marching in bands of from 300 to 400 across the country, committing depredations. The objective point of these forces is said to be Monterey. The governor of Chihuahua has appealed to President Diaz for more troops to put down the rebellion.

RIOTOUS SCENES.

Over 1,000 Street Car Employes Quit Work in Indianapolis—They Prevent the Running of Cars.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan. 11.—The Indianapolis street car system, owned by Chicago capitalists, is tied up by a strike which every employe has joined. The strike was declared Sunday morning at 4 o'clock. Between 900 and 1,000 are out.

The trouble is over an order issued by President Frenzel that employes should no longer ride on the badges worn by them. The men have been riding on these badges for years and claim that to be required to pay fare is an injustice they will not tolerate.

The strike took an ugly phase from the start. Organized labor, which is very strong in this city, sympathizes with the strikers, and early in the forenoon the various stable houses of the company were surrounded by the strikers and their friends. In the afternoon the company undertook to run out some cars with road officers and office employes.

The result was mob scenes such as have not been witnessed in this city since the great railway strike of 1876. The mob, composed of strikers and organized labor friends, gathered at the corner of Illinois and Washington streets, and as fast as a car would come down from the up-town stables it was taken possession of, the electric current cut off and the car pushed by hand into the Maryland street stable near the Union railway station. Four cars were run out during the afternoon and each was captured by the mob.

Superintendent of Police Colbert called on all the available policemen, but they were unable to do anything. At one time during the afternoon fully 5,000 men were on Illinois street to see that no cars were run. There was no bloodshed, but some very rough handling was done. Rocks were hurled through the glass windows of the cars at the road officers. After the four cars had been captured and dismantled the company decided not to attempt to run any more.

A BAD GANG CAUGHT.

They Had Flooded Salt Lake City with an Excellent Counterfeit of Gold Coin.

SALT LAKE CITY, U. T., Jan. 11.—A gang of counterfeiters, which flooded the city with spurious $5, $10 and $20 gold pieces during the holidays, was arraigned before United States Commissioner Green Saturday. All pleaded not guilty. Mary Gigson, wife of the principal counterfeiter, took the stand and implicated her husband, Jesse Gigson, as well as William Gibson, William Cronk, P. D. Sprague and Mark King. The men were bound over to await the grand jury in the sum of $5,000 each, on default of which they were taken to the penitentiary. The gang had its headquarters one block from the police station and made 1,500 counterfeit coins. They were making preparations to visit Denver, Kansas City and Omaha and other eastern cities when arrested. The design and weight of the money was perfect. The true ring of the gold coin made it one of the most successful attempts at counterfeiting ever perpetrated.

WIDOWED BY HER FATHER.

On an Appeal from His Daughter John Morris Shoots Her Husband Dead.

PEORIA, Ill., Jan. 11.—John Morris shot and instantly killed his son-in-law, W. Murphy, at Kingston Mines, a small coaling hamlet 20 miles from here, Sunday night. Murphy had been drinking for some time and went home and abused and beat his wife, who appealed to her father for protection. After warning Murphy his father-in-law took a shotgun and poured its contents into him. Murphy fell dead in his tracks. The coroner has gone to Kingston Mines to investigate.

A Murder on the Reserve.

On the Sisseton reservation an Indian named Half Cot was caught in a compromising position with the wife of an Indian named Red Bird, at the home of the latter, when Red Bird seized a neckyoke and dealt Half Cot a blow on the head, splitting the skull. Death was instantaneous. Red Bird was arrested by the Indian police without resistance. The murdered Indian was a single man about 30 years old.

A Valuable Satchel.

State Treasurer Bobleter left St. Paul the other evening for New York and only a few persons knew that the little yellow grip which the treasurer carried in his hand contained $1,200,000. Rather than trust to the uncertainty of an express company in this age when the train robber is abroad, Col. Bobleter concluded to personally convey the precious package to its destination, where it will be used to liquidate other bonds of a like sum.

Found Dead in His Bed.

John M. Derby, a prominent land attorney, was found dead in his bed at Duluth. He complained of having been sick for several days and took a whole bottle of a patent consumption cure. He was 42 years of age and came there from Port Huron, Mich., ten years ago, where he was collector of customs. He leaves a wife and one child.

The report of the treasurer showed receipts during the year of $2,012.03; expenditures, $1,941.58; balance in treasury, $70.45.

ROOKS IN LONDON.

A Noted Bird That Is Now Scarcely Ever Seen in the Great City.

One of the most interesting birds which still figure in London bird life is, beyond doubt, the rook. His connection with London is historic. The rook has long since forsaken the precincts of the temple, and even living memory can not connect him with the place. But it may surprise many to hear that we have still a rookery in the very center of London, a sight which certainly constitutes one of the greatest curiosities connected with the city.

Almost within a stone's-throw of the heart of London, a little to the east of where Chancery lane debouches into High Holborn, one may notice on the opposite side of the way a low archway. Through it a passage leads between high buildings to an open space nearly surrounded on all sides by legal offices. The place is know as Bray's Inn gardens, and is well kept and little frequented. The sooty stretch of grass, which looks as green and fresh as it is possible to look in the center of London, is studded with a large number of tall plane trees in good condition, which give the place a charming rural aspect quite unexpected in such a quarter.

It is here, separated by some miles on every side from the open country, that there still exists in dwindling numbers one of the most ancient colonies of rooks. The nests still hang in the branches of the plane trees, and up to the present the birds have always returned in the spring to put them in repair and hatch out their young.

At one time this rookery was far more extensive than it is now. Even in 1878 there were twenty-eight full nests in the breeding season. This year I count eighteen nests only. An interesting feature of the place and the one which doubtless tends to attach them to it is the care which is taken of the birds. They are fed regularly, the food given being dog-biscuit steeped in water. It is spread by the gardener on an inclosed mound in the center of the gardens, and it proves very attractive to a host of sparrows as well as the rooks.

The rook, most conservative of all birds as he is, is now almost driven out of London.—Illustrated English Magazine.

AFTER all, the old-fashioned meter by moonlight is about the only one that has stood the test of time and the experts.—Texas Siftings.

The wrong way, with Catarrh, is to stop it without curing it. The poisonous, irritating snuffs, strong caustic solutions, "creams," balms and the like may, perhaps, palliate for a time. But they may drive the disease to the lungs. The wrong way is full of danger.

The right way is a proved one. It's with Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. It cures, perfectly and permanently, by its mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties, the worst cases of Chronic Catarrh. It has proved itself right, thousands of times, when everything else has failed.

And this makes its proprietors willing to prove that it's the right thing for you, no matter how bad your case or of how long standing.

If they can't cure your Catarrh, they'll pay you $500 in cash.

They mean it.

They're certain of their medicine.

MY HUSBAND'S COUSIN.

A Breach of Years That Was Finally Healed.

I led the gayest and happiest of lives until I was twenty. Then my father died suddenly, and was found, like so many men who are supposed to be rich during life, to have left almost nothing. My mother did not survive his death very long, and I was left alone in the world, so far as near relatives were concerned.

I sent at once for Cousin Rachel Armstrong, the resource of all her kindred when they were in trouble, and she promptly responded to my call, as she did to all demands on her good nature. It was at this juncture that Mr. Laurence, my father's lawyer and most intimate friend, very unexpectedly asked me to marry him. At first, I was too much astonished to reply; but, as I grew more accustomed to the idea, it lost its strangeness, and even appealed to me. Brought up, as I had been, amidst unbounded tenderness as well as luxury, it was terrible to find myself without anyone to depend on. I had no one, however, but Cousin Rachel; and she owned nearer and more imperative claims than mine—she had an invalid mother who needed her constantly. Besides this, I would be obliged to support myself—I, who knew nothing useful or practical. Looking back now, I do not think I regret my marriage; but I do regret some of the motives which mixed with my real attachment for Mr. Laurence and urged me to the step.

I said yes after some hesitation, and we were quietly married within two months of my mother's death. When I first told her of my decision, Cousin Rachel looked grave, and said:

"Are you sure you do not care for Charlie Morris, Helen?"

Charles Morris was a scapegrace cousin of mine, who was studying medicine in Berlin. As soon as he heard of my parents' death he did ask me to marry him; but I would as soon have thought of marrying my pet canary as Charlie—he would have been about as well fitted for the position. We had had many flirtations in the past, but that was a different thing. I answered Charlie's letter telling him of my intentions, and he sent me in return several epistles in which he indulged in histrionics. Some of them did not reach me until after the wedding, but I burned them at once; I did not wish to be disloyal to my husband, even in thought.

Mr. Laurence was very, very kind to me during our year of wedded life, and I was genuinely sorry when, at the expiration of that time, he died, after a brief illness of pneumonia. He had gratified my every wish, and made life exceedingly pleasant to me, so it was no wonder, when I found myself again alone, that my grief was deep and sincere, if not overwhelming. Cousin Rachel came, as usual, to my assistance; and, as she had lost her mother within the year, had leisure to devote herself entirely to my comfort.

When the will was read, everybody's sympathy with me was turned to anger against Mr. Laurence. I was astonished at its contents myself, though I was less angry with my husband than my relatives and friends were. It was a strange will, and not at all the sort I would have expected Mr. Laurence to make. He left me his property, but not unconditionally; in fact, there were two very positive and annoying provisos attached to my enjoyment of his wealth; I must agree to live at Greystone, the old Laurence homestead, for five years after my husband's death, or forfeit two-thirds of the estate, which would in that case go to a distant cousin of his. I must also remain a widow for the same period of time; for, in the event of my remarrying within the five years, I would lose all of the money, which was in that case to revert to the same relative.

I was indignant at the latter clause; for I had fully meant to remain faithful to my husband's memory, and resented the imputation that I might not. I wondered whether he suspected me of a weakness for Charlie Morris. The first condition was displeasing, because it restricted my freedom of movement and condemned me to what I knew must be very like banishment. From what Mr. Laurence had told me, I was aware that Greystone, though a fine old place, was situated in the interior of Pennsylvania, far from any large town, and, to a young woman like myself, it could not seem a very desirable residence during the best part of my youth.

They wanted me to break the will; but this I indignantly refused, although they said I could easily do it. I owed Mr. Laurence a good deal more than he owed me, and I was better off than I had been a year ago. No, I would take my choice of money or independence. I did choose, after some hesitation, and so great was my horror at the thought of poverty that I chose the first, and made my preparations to go to Greystone. Rachel offered to accompany me to my new residence and remain with me there. I was delighted at the prospect of her company, but hesitated to accept what I could not but regard as a sacrifice on her part. She smiled when I put it in this way to her.

"All places are alike to me, my dear Helen; I can be contented anywhere," she answered. "I am twenty-eight years old and have ceased to care for gayeties; it is different with you."

It was spring when we first went to Greystone, and the country was at its loveliest. Solitude in such a beautiful spot seemed very pleasant, and summer was upon us before we realized it. I had two or three intimate friends to visit me, and the season passed quickly and agreeably enough. Then autumn came with its own peculiar charm, and we enjoyed exploring the country under its new aspect. Even the long, quiet winter did not prove unendurable, though I at least drew a little breath of relief when it ended. Rachel did not mind the stillness and loneliness; in fact, I think she rather preferred them. She seemed to have found a peace which stood her in stead of happiness and was not a contemptible substitute for it. I sometimes envied her.

Our life went on so quietly that any unusual incident which served to break its monotony awoke our interest to a degree disproportionate to the magnitude of the event. Perhaps that was why I speculated a great deal over an adventure which befell me in January. I was taking my daily walk alone, Rachel, who always accompanied me, being detained indoors by a bad attack of neuralgia. I had done all I could to make her comfortable and she had dropped into a doze before I started. I have said I was alone; but I should not have used that expression, for I had a companion whose society was a great comfort to me. I forgot to mention one very agreeable adjunct of the establishment at Greystone which I had found there on my arrival; it was a beautiful greyhound, Jupiter by name. He had been the pet dog of Mr. Laurence's cousin, who had made his home with my husband's mother until her death, five years previously. This young man, Wayne Godwin by name, had been abroad ever since, so I had never seen him. He had sent me a letter of condolence when informed by the lawyer of my husband's death and the will making him a possible legatee.

On this particular morning, warmly wrapped up in furs, I walked along, Jupiter bounding at my side, until we reached a wood, whose tall trees, their topmost branches swaying in the wind, looked like giant skeletons waving aloft their skinny arms. As we passed, I noticed the animal gave a start as if alarmed. I laid my hand tenderly on his long nose, while I looked down at him reassuringly. Then I glanced about to see whether I could detect any reason for his fright, and I noticed a stranger coming toward us. He was a good-looking man, well dressed, and newcomers were not an every-day occurrence in our vicinity; but I should probably not have given him a second thought, had it not been for Jupiter's strange conduct. The animal gazed at the approaching figure a few moments, long and earnestly; then made two or three leaps forward, and, before I could recover from my astonishment, was licking his hand, barking, and in canine fashion expressing unmistakable pleasure at the meeting.

I was completely puzzled; for the stranger, after returning Jupiter's affectionate greeting with interest, gave me a rapid glance, lifted his hat and went on his way without a word of explanation. With some difficulty, I restrained the dog from following him, and, burning with indignation at the man's behavior, which seemed to me as peculiar as the four-footed creature's, I continued my walk. I cut my promenade short, however, as soon as I thought it was compatible with my dignity to do so, and hastened to see Rachel. I found her much improved, so I poured out my curious narrative without pause. When I had finished, she merely smiled and made no comment. Almost the only irritating thing about Rachel was her lack of curiosity.

Curiosity, like all emotions of the human mind, dies from lack of food: so, hearing nothing more of the object of Jupiter's interest, I soon ceased to think about him.

Two or three weeks after my encounter, Rachel and I took a walk together. We went in the direction of the village, as my cousin had an errand there, and, on our way, we passed the graveyard on a hill back of the church, where all Mr. Laurence's family were buried. Before we reached our destination, I grew tired, for I was not feeling very well, and Rachel insisted upon my turning back, declaring that she did not mind walking the remainder of the distance alone. I obeyed her, though rather reluctantly, and lent my steps in the direction of home.

It was a dull gray day early in February. The sky was overspread with clouds and the air was full of unshed moisture, making it chill and heavy. I felt cheerless enough, and, when I found myself near the graveyard again, my feet turned toward it almost instinctively. On this particular day, the place, with its silence and gloom and the white stones marking all that was left of many generations once young and gay, like myself, seemed in consonance with my mood. I climbed the hill, entered the churchyard, and picked my way among the graves, until I reached the spot in which all the dead and gone Laurences for more than a century had been buried. A tall marble shaft marked my husband's last resting-place, and, as I stood by it, a sudden sense of the unsatisfactoriness of life came over me. Was there never to be any of that fullness of joy of which I had dreamed, but only the calm resignation that my Cousin Rachel assured me was the best thing in this world? With the restlessness of youth, I rebelled, and two hot tears fell on my husband's grave—tears of selfish repining far more than of real grief. Glancing up at this moment I saw a man approaching. I had been standing in the shadow of a yew tree, and he evidently had not noticed me until that moment, for he started perceptibly as our eyes met. I started, too, for the stranger was no other than the person to whom Jupiter had shown such friendly recognition. There was a moment's pause of embarrassment, then the gentleman lifted his hat and apologized for his appearance.

"I beg your pardon, madam," he said. "I had no intention of intruding, but I did not see that anyone was here until this instant."

"No apologies are necessary," I answered, hastily. "I did not mean to remain here, at any rate." And before he could say anything to prevent me I bowed and walked rapidly away.

As I went I heard him uttering more apologies and disclaimers at my going away, but I paid no heed. I could not help wondering who he was, though, and had curiosity enough to look back when I reached the foot of the hill. He was standing exactly where I had left him, holding his hat in his hand, as if he had bared his head in reverence. Was it possible—the idea had flashed into my head for the first time—could he be my husband's cousin?

I hurried home, hoping Rachel might already have reached there; but she had not, though she appeared soon afterward. In some excitement, I told her about my second meeting with Jupiter's friend, and my conjecture as to his identity. She did not seem so much interested as I thought she ought to be, but busied herself hunting for a book while she listened to me.

"Very likely you may be right," she said, when I expressed my opinion that it must be Wayne Godwin.

"I should like to know my husband's cousin," I remarked, "though Mr. Laurence never said much about him."

"But he may not want to make your acquaintance; he may regard you as an enemy—an interloper."

"Nonsense!" I said; but I concluded to let Mr. Godwin make the first overtures.

Some days later business called me to Philadelphia, and while there I took it into my head to remain some time. I wrote to Rachel of my intention, begging her not to let the fact of my absence be generally known. I began to fear that my husband's cousin was staying in the neighborhood to spy on my actions. Rachel promised to do the best she could, so I finished my visit and returned to Greystone with some friends.

My cousin took this opportunity to go away, knowing I would not be lonely in her absence; and, though I missed her, I was glad she was going to have a change. Hardly had she gone when I received a call. It was from Wayne Godwin. I went down to see him, and, sure enough, he was the stranger whom I had met in my walks. He rose when I entered, and held out his hand.

"May I claim relationship?" he said, cordially. "I ventured to call on that ground, though I had never met you in the regular way, and you had not expressed any desire to see me."

"Oh, yes, I had," I answered, laughing, for all my suspicions had vanished at his tone; and then I told him of my previously spoken wish.

That broke the ice at once, and we became very good friends before his call ended. He came again in a day or two, and we were soon on excellent terms. My house party broke up, but Mr. Godwin still remained in the village. We laughed a good deal over the peculiar terms of my husband's will, though he was kind enough to express some disapproval thereat. He indignantly disclaimed any intention of profiting by its provisions.

"But you couldn't help it," I said. "It depends on me."

"Yes, it depends on you," he answered, thoughtfully.

I told him about my absent cousin and praised her good qualities until he declared, laughingly, that I was insane on the subject. He never had much to say on those occasions, but that was natural, for he did not know my relative, and therefore could not be aware of her perfections.

At last I received a letter from Rachel setting a day for her departure and telling me the train on which she would return, so that I might drive to the station for her. I did not mention to Mr. Godwin that she was coming; I thought it would be pleasant to have them meet unexpectedly—I don't know why, except that I was young and foolish enough to like surprises. The coachman drove me over at the right time, but my cousin did not arrive. There would be another train along in a little while, though not an express, so I let the carriage wait for it, while I walked home. The day was raw and windy and the waiting-room not very comfortable, so I preferred this to remaining. On the way I met Mr. Godwin and we sauntered leisurely on, talking of all sorts of things except Rachel Armstrong's return. I merely explained that I had been to the village.

When we reached the house I went upstairs to remove my wraps and change my dress, leaving my visitor to make himself comfortable in the library. I knew he was perfectly at home there, so I did not hurry over my toilet; in fact, I must have dawdled unconscionably, for when I descended the stairs I saw Rachel had arrived. She did not see me, however, for she was in the library face to face with Wayne Godwin. He had his overcoat on, his hat in one hand, while with the other he grasped a chair as if for support. As for my cousin, she looked a different creature from what I had ever seen her appear. She was pale, too, deathly so, but she stood proudly erect, grasping her umbrella tightly in her gloved fingers, perhaps to steady them. Neither of the two noticed me, and before I could remind them of my presence—if, indeed, I had not been too astonished to do it—Rachel had asked, in a strangely haughty tone:

"May I ask what you are doing here?"

"I beg your pardon," was the almost humble answer. "I did not know you were coming back."

By this time I was in the doorway, and Mr. Godwin came toward me, saying:

"Good-by, Mrs. Laurence. I am going away."

"Going away? And without a word of explanation? I think, as a friend, I have a right to ask—" I began.

"I will write to you and explain, if you will allow me," Mr. Godwin said.

"You may explain here and now, if you wish," interjected Rachel.

My cousin's voice sounded hard and cold, and her face was like a stone.

"Thank you," answered Mr. Godwin, gravely, and then he turned to me and spoke:

"We were lovers once—seven years ago, it was; but I—well, I behaved very ill. I did—what you would call flirting, I suppose. A man can't always explain how he is tempted, without throwing the blame on a woman; and no one likes to do that. So we quarreled, and I went away. There is no use in my saying now that I bitterly repented—that I never shall do anything else but repent. There are women so good their very goodness makes them hard. She forgives everybody else, but I suppose she will never forgive me."

All this time he never looked at Rachel, but, when he had ended, turned as if to go. I was watching her, however, and I saw the changes in her face behind its stony mask. I must speak, at all costs.

"She forgives you now," I cried. "You have spoiled each other's life long enough. Don't go on doing so any longer."

Wayne Godwin looked at Rachel then, and something in her face must have awakened hope; for he took a step toward her.

"Is there any possibility of forgiveness, Rachel? If long repentance could avail—"

But my proud, calm cousin was sobbing quietly in a chair, and I thought it was time for me to go. When I came back, the breach of years was healed, and I found my husband's cousin ready to be claimed as my own. They were married very soon—they had waited long enough, Wayne said—and we all made our home together. The happy pair would not leave me, for they declared they owed their happiness to me; so we staid at Greystone.

Charlie Morris has come back from Germany. He is much improved and is getting a good practice. Perhaps when the five years are ended—but, in any case, there is no danger of my losing my money through "My Husband's Cousin."—Anna M. Dwight, in Boston Budget.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Browned Turnips: Pare the turnips, cut in slices, crosswise, and boil thirty minutes, drain; put two tablespoonfuls of butter in a frying-pan, let heat and put in the turnips with a tablespoonful of sugar; stir and turn until the slices are browned; dust with salt and pepper and serve.—Farm and Fireside.

—Fruit Cake: Two and one-half cupfuls of sugar, two cupfuls of butter, two-thirds cupful of milk, nearly five cupfuls of flour, a small one-half cupful of molasses, six eggs, one teaspoonful of soda, spice, one-fourth pound of citron, one and one-half cupfuls of raisins, one cupful of currents.—Good Housekeeping.

—Old-Fashioned Nut Cake: Two cups of sugar stirred to a cream, with three-quarters of a cup of butter, a cup of rich milk, a teaspoon of cream of tartar. A cup of hickory nuts, chopped fine, is stirred through the cake, just before it is put in the oven. It should be baked in large, brick-shaped loaves; iced with a thick icing, through which half a cup of hickory nuts have been stirred.—Old Homestead.

—Nice Fried Oysters: Drain the oysters and dry them on a cloth; dip each in beaten egg, then in cracker dust, season with a little salt and pepper, lay them in a frying basket and set in boiling fat. Cook to a delicate brown; then take up an unglazed paper to absorb any fat that may still cling to them. Keep in a warm place until all are cooked, then garnish the dish on which they are served with curled parsley or slices of lemon.—Orange Judd Farmer.

—Splendid Banana Cake: One-fourth cup of butter, one cup of sugar, two yolks and one white of egg, half a cup (or a little more) of milk, two cups of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Bake the cake in jelly tins (I like two large, square pans better than three round ones), make a frosting of the unused white of egg, spread on the cake (when it has cooled) and upon this place a layer of sliced banana. Brush some white of egg on the top and sprinkle with fine white sugar.—Detroit Free Press.

—Creamed Lobster: You will have enough to serve three people if you use half a pint of cream, one pint of lobster cut into small pieces, one heaping tablespoonful of butter, one level tablespoonful of flour, a grain of cayenne, one teaspoonful of lemon juice. Season the lobster with all the cayenne and a little more than half the salt. Put the butter in the granite-ware dish and place over the lamp. When the butter is melted add the flour, and stir until the mixture is smooth and frothy; then gradually pour in the cream, stirring all the while. When the sauce boils up stir in the lobster. Now put hot water, to the depth of one inch, in the lower pan. Set the upper pan on this and place all over the lamp. Put on the cover and cook for ten minutes, stirring frequently. At the end of this time stir in the lemon juice and serve at once.—Ladies' Home Journal.

BEDSPREADS AND PORTIERES.

An Excellent Material for Mats and Draperies.

A pretty material for bedspreads and portieres is bargarran art cloth. It comes in white, cream, and colors, and in four different styles of mesh. In colors it is fifty-two inches, and in cream and white it is seventy-two inches. It is heavy and durable. Where it is required for draperies no cloth can be better than this, as it adjusts itself in soft, graceful lines, and it would be almost impossible for the most awkward hand to give the folds a "stiff" appearance. For table mats it is "a treasure." Make the mats about two and one-half inches larger than the body of the mat is desired, and ravel out this extra width, when the working of the mat is finished, for fringe. A pretty way to add color to the fringe is to darn from the edge of the cloth before the mat is raveled; darn in about three inches at the widest place and two and one-half inches at the narrowest; regulate the width of darning so that the inside line shall be a series of points or squares; this is easily done as the meshes regulate the stitches in the same way canvas does. When the edge is raveled the colored threads will be pretty with the white. If more color is desired any pattern may be darned, or cross-stitched the same as it can be on canvas.

This cloth is well suited for bedspreads. The pattern chosen should be a large open one. A handsome spread was worked on white with green and gold floss; it was made long enough to come under the pillows, which should be placed rather low. The sides of the spread were finished with fringe. One can afford to put considerable work on a spread of this kind, as no shams are required, and there is almost "no end" to the wear of the goods.

A pretty spread is of unbleached sheeting. A center pattern and border of flowers in large, open designs was stamped and then worked in white tidy cotton; the work is heavy, and the large, heavy flowers in pure white, massed against the creamy background, produce a charming effect.—The Housekeeper.

The Tail of a Rat.

A rat's tail is a wonderful thing. The great naturalist, Cuvier, says that there are more muscles in this curious appendage than are to be found in that part of the human anatomy which is most admired for its ingenious structure—namely, the hand. To the rat, in fact, its tail serves as a sort of hand, by means of which the animal is enabled to crawl along narrow ledges or other difficult passages, using it to balance with or gain a hold. It is prehensile, like the tails of some monkeys. By means of it the little beast can jump up heights otherwise inaccessible, employing it as a projectile spring.—Chicago Globe.

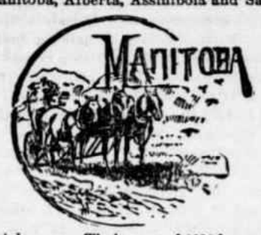
WHERE THE FARMERS MAKE MONEY.

Farming on poor land or in localities where drought, hailstorms or other climatic disturbances are prevalent does not pay. A good year does not compensate for the several bad ones to which it is neighbor. It has now been clearly demonstrated that for wheat, oats, barley and live stock the successful farmers are those who have gone north and west. Their wheat yield is heavier, their cattle of larger size and better condition than any raised by their southern friends. Not only is this so in the United States, but our Canadian cousins find themselves with unexpected wealth in their new provinces of Manitoba, Alberta, Assiniboia and Saskatchewan. Their crop of 1891 has surpassed the figures given even by the boomsters. Manitoba is sought out by the eastern Canadians as the Israelites sought for the promised land, but with more expedition and a better spirit, and they are spreading into and taking possession of the equally fertile prairies and park lands of the territories beyond, which, with great enterprise, they have gridironed with railways. The New York Sun, in an article on the Canadian provinces west of the Red river, said that people from those parts smiled at the stunted grain in the more eastern districts of the continent. Said the Sun: "Men who have seen many seasons of Minnesota wheat-raising said in Manitoba last week that they had never looked upon such wheat-fields before," and the St. Paul Journal speaks of that country as "The future granary of the world, which, with beckoning fingers, invites the home hungering people of the congested east to its hospitable and rich domain."



VINEGAR EELS.

From a Lecture by Dr. J. H. Kellogg, of Battle Creek, Mich.

Those interesting little creatures known as "vinegar eels" are always found in good vinegar, that is, in vinegar non-chemically prepared. They are popularly supposed to make vinegar "sharp," but this is not true. A drop of vinegar under a microscope gives one an idea of the multitude of these little wrigglers which flourish in a table cruet. Like the western mining claim of which we read, very literally "there's millions in it." It is understood by those who have studied into the matter, that these little worms, which are closely allied to a great number of other species found outside the body, are productive of mischief. Vinegar is very unhealthful stuff. It has been found that these vinegar eels are not always destroyed in the stomach. The acid of the gastric juice will kill most parasites and germs, but vinegar eels are accustomed to acidity and they sometimes run the gauntlet of the stomach and get into the small intestines, where they can live without difficulty. They are also found in the lower part of the alimentary canal, and are the heretofore undiscovered source of intestinal irritation. These parasites are present in vinegar under conditions under which decomposition is going on. If vinegar is to be taken into the body, it should first be boiled, that the eels may be killed; and if it is to be applied externally, it should be boiled, also, else these parasitic eels will dry up and be ready to be transferred to the interior of the body if they get a chance. They are very tenacious of life. The eels of sour paste are closely allied to vinegar eels. If sour paste is allowed to dry up until it is very dry, and then a little of it be mixed in with some fresh paste, in a short time the fresh paste will be swarming with these parasites.—Reported by Helen L. Manning.

Fangle—What are you cutting that piece out of the paper for?

Cumso—I'm going to take the paper home, and I'm very anxious for my wife to read the article, as it is on economy in dress. If I merely take the uncut paper home, she won't see it.

Fangle—But I don't see how she's going to see it if you take the paper with the item cut out.

Cumso—Well, when she sees the place where the article was she'll be so curious to know what was cut out that she'll send and get another copy.—N. Y. Sun.

"I'm nearly always disappointed in the Christmas gifts my husband buys me," confessed Mrs. Dimmick to Mrs. Kickshaw.

"Is that so?"

"Yes. He means well, but he doesn't seem to get me the things I want. I try to appear pleased, of course, but I'd rather have things I care for. I give him hints, but he never seems to catch them."

"Now I never have any trouble like that with Mr. Kickshaw."

"How do you manage it?"

"Easily enough. I buy him for his Christmas present just what I want to have myself, and he gets for me just what he thinks he would like to have, and then we exchange the articles with each other."—Harper's Magazine.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury,

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

—Rev. Davies attended the funeral of Mrs. Ditty, daughter of W. C. Haskel of Maple Plaine on Thursday.

—The Eagle's report of the Saturday evening meeting of the School Board is not very flattering to the president, secretary and two members present. It seems as if four out of six ought to be able "to form a quorum." and do buisness.

—Mrs. John Sturman returned on Saturday from Norcross where she has been visiting her husband who is, at present, running the pumping station at that place. She says there was no snow there but that it was terribly cold out on the prairie especially riding on a railroad velocipede.

—Scarlet Fever has made its appearance within the village limits four children of Mr. Gohl, on the west side being the victims. The house has been quarantined and it is hoped to limit its ravages. The surest way for those who have never had it and especially children is to keep away from where it is and from those having it or who have recently had it as it is very contagious and sometimes fatal.

—Rev. B. E. Sherwin, of Watertown drove over on Wednesday, with his daughter on her way to the city. Being a little late the devine allowed his horse to step out and made the seven miles in forty minutes. Mr. S claims to have a standing offer of $285 for his nag. He is quite a lively traveller for a minister but as the gentleman has lately been elected Justice of Peace in Watertown, perhaps he is going over the country at this lively gait as squire rather than as a preacher.

A Model Farmers' Weekly Newspaper.

Under the new management the FARMERS' TRIBUNE will give a weekly resume of the news of the world. Editorials will discuss the important, economic and practical questions of the day. The agricultural department, edited by C. L. Smith, well known as a writer for Farm Stock and Home, Orange Judd Farmer and other agricultural papers, will be devoted to the interests and improvement in the Northwest.

The articles will be practical rather than theoretical. The future success of farming lies in intense methods rather than broad fields. The FARMERS' TRIBUNE will furnish its readers with the best, believing that the man who makes "farming pay" is the best model.

The best methods of improving stock-breeding, feeding and care will be practically and intelligently treated. The dairy, poultry and garden will also receive due attention. The market is an important factor of success for the farmer and the FARMERS' TRIBUNE will furnish reliable information of the prices and conditions of the markets.

JOS. VANEMAN, Pres.
R. M. WALTERS, Secretary.
Delano, Jany. 8th, 1892.

Mr. John G. Woolley.

Mr. John G. Woolley was born near Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1850, and was the son of a prominent physician. He was graduated at the Ohio Wesleyan University in 1871 and after travelling abroad entered the law school at Ann Arbor, Mich., in 1872. He was admitted to the bar in 1873 and in 1887 went to Minneapolis. He struck that breezy Wertern city at just the right time and rose at once to a wonderful success. At the age of 35 he was earning as a lawyer fees to the amount of $25,000 annually.

Up to the age of 17 Mr. Woolley had never tasted alcohol. About that time a sister died of consumption and the doctors perscribed brandy and cod liver oil for young Woolley who it was feared was going into the same disease. He soon became a heavy and regular drinker as the result of this prescription and at the time of his wonderful success as a lawyer in Minneapolis he had become a periodical drunkard. About 1884 as Mr. Woolley puts it, "the bottom dropped out and I was a 'gonner'. I tried everything to overcome the appetite for liquor. I gave up my profession, took the Kedley cure, medicine of all kinds, baths and even imprisonment with nothing but temporary benefit. In 1887 I had lost all hope. I quit home and started away without any definite aim. I drifted to New York City. A few months later my wife and boys followed me. For a time I kept sober and earned money, but it ended in the same old way. At last the W. C. T. U. got hold of me, took care of me and I believe saved my life. I became a Christian Jan. 31st four years ago Since then I have been trying to save other men.

Aside from the magnificent platform work which Mr. Woolley is now doing in different parts of the country he has established the Rest Island Mission on a farm and Island in Lake Pepin, in the Mississipi River, near his old home. Here he takes bankrupt men puts them on their feet and helps them back to life. Mr Woolley is now studying mission work in the principal cities of the United States with special reference to reclaiming drunkards.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

It may be here stated that the country about Lake Minnetonka was during the years 1853-4 mostly unsurveyed and the settlers held their lands by priority of settlement or Squatters rights, a usage which perhaps owed its existence more to the consent of the settlers than to written law. Some lands under this usage were kept by settlers here for some friends still in the east, by merely making marks about the lands indicating claims of such parties to the lands which was mostly respected by land hunters.

During the summer of 1854 further settlements, with accompanying incidents were made in the following order: William F. Russell a printer from New York settled on the west shore of Crystal Bay in Sec 17, town of Orono, where within a short time he was followed by a brother printer, Frederick A. Jennings of Ohio. Allen T. French of Ohio, settled on the north shore of Crystal Bay in Sec 9 Orono. In making his location Mr. French took a canoe at John Carman's place (now Spring Park) where he and family were remaining temporarily and rowed through the narrows to the place of his future abode, while on his route he noticed a sail boat on the main or Lower Lake, which craft containing but one person, William Lithgow, was then on its fatal trip.

After Mr. French had passed out of sight, the sail boat was capsized by the wind and its occupant was drowned; thus Lithgow became the first white victim to the waves of Minnetonka. The wreck was discovered next morning by James Maxwell who reported it to O. E. Garrison and others at Wayzata, who recovered Lithgow's body. Mr. French accompanied and assisted by his brother William French erected a cabin, in which he and his wife Martha French began their residence in Minnesota. The scene of Mr. French's settlement was on the premises of G. C. Rodell. On one occasion during that year, Frederick A. Jennings, in passing over Lake Minnetonka, had his boat capsized and with great difficulty gained the shore at what is now known as Orono Point, where under an impression that he was on an island remained many hours, running into days, being almost famished. He finally succeeded in attracting the attention of Allen and William French to his shouts and signals of distress. Imagine his surprise on being informed by his rescuers that he was on a peninsula instead of an island, from where he could have emerged on dry land and reached the settlement of Allen T. French inside of an hour. From that circumstance the place was known for many years as Starvation or Printer's Point the latter referring to the occupation of Mr. Jennings. William French settled in Sec 3, Orono, Stephen Bean of Main settled in Sec 33, Orono, on the premises now owned by Anna Bennett.

Job Moffat, a quaker having learned through James Maxwell of the prospective water power on Pioneer Creek and with the idea of untilizing the same began a settlement there that fall. In establishing himself at that place, he travelled with an ox team from St Anthony's Falls over O. E. Garrison's route to Wayzata. From Wayzata he was obbliged to open and make his own road, following the Indian trail west ward by Long Lake to a point near Maxwell's Bay where he left the trail hewing his way to a point near the southeasterly corner of Independence Township, from where he changed his course to a northwesterly direction and continued his exertions until he arrived at his destination on Pioneer Creek; thus becoming the first settler in the future town of Inependence, the scene of which was in Sec 22, now the premises of Robt M. Mills. After having erected a dwelling he returned east for his family leaving the premises in charge of his son Matthew S. Cook, son-in-law of John Carman settled on north shore of Cook's Bay, his claim lying in Secs. 24 and 13 Minnetrista.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 8.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 8.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 8.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 8.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 8.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory.

NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION AT CHICAGO.

Fifteen ballots taken for ten contestants. The highest received by each being: 10 for New York; Cincinnatti 11; Kansas City and St Paul. 13; San Francisco 15; Des Moines 17; Detroit 19; Indianapolis and Milwaukee 22; Chicago 27. Total ballot was 49. This gives the city by the lake the Democratic National convention to meet next June 21, about two weeks after the Republican meeting at Minneapolis.

CONSIDERABLE talk is being indulged in mostly by Republican newspaper as to the fusion of the Democratic and Alliance parties for the next campaign with a view of defeating the Republican ticket, both National and State. If defeating the Republicans is the only object and an alliance is to be made it might be as well to allow the Prohibitionists an elector or two and a few of the State officers so as to capture their vote, also. Their doctrine is not so different from the Democratic (both believe in no license) as the sub-treasury scheme in which Democrats do not believe. The proper way for Democrats to do, however, is to adhere strictly to their own doctrines and not trade off offices for offices. Principles are at stake and should be fought for.

"A Tariff on Coffee is a Tax, Unquestionably."—Senator C. K. Davis at Buffalo.

If tariff on coffee is a tax, tariff on sugar is a tax, tariff on tin is a tax, tariff on knives and pearl buttons and tariff on anything that has to be paid is tax. If you smuggle goods the tariff may be escaped, but that does not destroy the truth that TARIFF IS A TAX.

Mr. CLEVELAND'S FRANKNESS.

Words of Commendation From a Radical Republican Organ.

New York Tribune.

For the outspoken frankness and earnestness of Mr. Cleveland's utterances at the dinner of the Business Men's Democratic Club last Friday night the Tribune has nothing but commendation. It is much better for the cause of honest government and decent politics that issues should be no "shifty schemes," nor "insincere professions," nor "political maneuvering," nor "political riddles," nor conundrums," nor "doubtful phrases".

We quite agree with him as to the mischievous effect of any resorts to temporary expedients to gain a political or partisan success. On this theme Mr. Cleveland occupies a very high plane; and we presume we may be permitted to say much higher than his party. In his public utterances he places himself in the position of a square fighter, He seems to believe in things and to have the courage of his convictions. We greet him as the champion of a cause. A cause that we do not believe in by any means; one that we shall conscientiously oppose; but at least a cause that contains a principle that has significance; means something besides the petty politics of self-seeking schemers, and is really worth taking sides and making an issue upon. So we say frankly that as Republicans we should much prefer to meet Grover Cleveland as the Democratic candidate for President on the tariff question rather than any other of the prominent Democrats who have been named who do not occupy so pronounced a position upon that issue.—St. Paul Daily News.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

While Matthew S. Cook was an early settler of the town of Minnetrista, settling there in the fall of 1854 he was preceded by others. John and Joseph Merz, the earliest settlers of that town took claims adjacent to the present site of St Bonifacius in the fall of 1853, settling there permanently with their families in the spring of 1854.

The German settlement which extends from the southwesterly part of Plymouth Township across Medina into Independence and Greenwood Township, was begun in 1854, by Frederick Radintz, Frank and Ferdinand Kritz, Daniel Glatz and others settling in Plymouth, and by Matthias Hansman, Joseph Welz, Carl Kassube Michael Winnen settling in Medina Michael Winnen afterwards removed to Plymouth to where his son Peter J. Winnen still resides. Amongst these Germans were a few Irish settlers, namely: The three Boyland brothers Michael, Andrew and John and —— Burke. These settlers reached their locations by following O. E. Garrison's route to a point a short distance east of Wayzata from where they opened a road running in a northwesterly direction by Joseph Wilson's (now Rodner's) F. Radintz and Mathias Hansman's with diverging branches to their several locations, which were extended as settlers came in becoming the means of ingress for that German settlement as it extended toward Crow River in the years following.

Early in 1855 and before the opening of spring, Earle Hoisington who had been prospecting for land on the Mississippi above Crow River wandered southward and after passing Pioneer creek found the southerly slope of Sec. 26 of Independence Township the ideal spot for a future home where he commenced a settlement forthwith, being the next settler after Job Moffat in Independence.

While the settlements made previous to the close of the year 1854 were sparse, they were permanent beginnings of a subjugation of the wilderness to the uses of civilized man, and during the fall of 1854, many of the pioneers, after having erected cabins on the spots of land cleared for habitations and cultivation returned to their former homes in the older states for their friends and families, including the swain returning to claim his first love, all inspired with the brightest anticipations of thrift and happiness to be enjoyed in their prospective homes in Minnesota, which enthusiasm they imparted to neighbor's and friends of their old homes, so that the visiting pioneers on their return to Minnesota the next spring, were not only accompanied by their families and relatives but by others in quest of homes in the promised land; also many were induced to come to Minnesota by glowing letters from pioneers, so that on the arrival of the spring of 1855 a heavy tide of immigration into the Big Woods was inaugurated, the route of immigration being by steamer to St. Paul and overland to Minneapolis and following the road opened by Garrison and Moffat to Wayzata and Pioneer creek. So important did this road become that it was legalized by a survey made by Campbell Beall in 1855 for C. W. Christmas, county surveyor. E. O. Newton and wife settled at confluence of the north and south forks of Crow river early in 1855, Mrs. Newton was the first white woman that came and lived in the Crow River valley. The Newton family were followed in May 1855 by James D. Young, Wm Gould and Thomas Holmes. These settlers came in by way of Shakopee, following an Indian trail, leading from the latter place across the narrows of Lake Minnetonka, by Pioneer creek to the confluence of the forks of Crow River. A few days later James D. Young and William Gould brought in supplies from St. Paul in which they followed Garrison and Moffat's road from Minneapolis to Pioneer Creek, from the latter place they were obliged to open their own road to the forks of Crow River, thus completing a road from Minneapolis to Crow River.

MAPLE LAKE.

The Literary Meeting Saturday evening Jan. 16 '92, was, notwithstanding the coldness of the weather, moderately large. The whole program was not carried out. The following exercises took place. Recitation, Miss Nettie Walters; song, George Gorman; recitation, Lincoln Sennett. Question debated—Resolved: That the statesman is more beneficial to the nation than the warrior. The affirmative was advocated by A. A. Jewett and Joseph Kevaney. The negative was defended by Lincoln Sennett, R. M. Glynn and J. F. Collins. The judges gave their decision in favor of the affirmative, Mr. James Gorman, Jr. acted as president in the absence of Dr. O'Connor. The speakers recieved the thanks of the audience because the former appreciated the fact that they are endowed with risible faculties as well as intellectual. The band could give no music as their musical instruments are affected by a virulent attack of LaGrippe.

The year of '92 has begun rather cold in this latitude, but no doubt the National conventions held at St. Paul and Minneapolis in June will warm up things.

In places the sleighing is pretty good but is not first class.

The wolf is getting very near the door in some localities. B. R. Hoisington saw a large one the other day within a few rods of his house, no doubt he was hunting for protection. That can best be found in the McKinley bill.

The Advent church at Armstrong is all enclosed but the cold weather put a stop to any further work.

E. Brandon, of Delano, has been helping B. R. Hoisington put in a tubular well. They got a flow of water at 170 feet.

Will St. Paul get the Democratic National Convention? The committee meets at Washington on Thursday to decide. Two National conventions would be glory enough for one state for some time to come.

B. H. Hall is still confined to the house with his lame knee but is improving slowly.

Mrs. George Shelley, of Rockford, was calling on friends in Independence last Monday and also Mr. A. Shelley, of Ind.

Last Monday evening your correspondent put on his best January suit and took the overland short line from Independence to Rockford for the purpose of hearing the noted John G. Wooley who was to lecture on temperance in the Advent church that evening. Have heard Mr. Wooley plead at the bar many a time as he is an ex-county attorney of Hennepin county. Also have heard him lecture on temperance before and consequently knew something of his ability. He is a good speaker and well calculated to draw the attention of a crowd. The house was well filled and good attention was given while Mr. Wooley administered to the audience his temperance lecture in very mild doses and as I scanned the congregation over, imagined I could see repentence marked upon the countenance of every habitual drinker and tobacco chewer and they seemed ready to repent in sackcloth and ashes. These temperance lectures have been in fashion ever since I can remember and long before. Just how much good they have done I am unable to say but hope they have helped thousands of poor fellows who have been given to drink. We know it takes agitation to bring reform and let the work go on if it may only save the drunkard. We should encourage those who are trying to put down the liquor traffic. Your correspondent arrived home just as the silver moon had illumined the eastern horizon while the mercury stood in the twenties, we hope none the worse for wear.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15, 1892.

Mr. Harrison has, if high Republican authority may be believed, relieved Mr. Blaine of the Chilian business and taken it entirely in his own hands. The same authority says that an ultimatum has been sent to Chili and that all of the correspondence and the President's accompanying proclamation which were ready ten days ago but were held back because of the Chilian minister having succeeded in bamboozling Mr. Blaine as to his country's intentions, will go to Congress just as soon as the evidence of all the sailors of the Baltimore has been taken. This evidence, as far as has been telegraphed to the eastern papers, has created a very warlike feeling in Congress, and if Mr. Harrison does not hurry up and send the correspondence in, he will find it demanded by resolution.

The House has adopted a resolution offered by Representative Holman that has spread consternation among the promoters of schemes requiring "a little appropriation." It declares it to be the judgment of the House that the granting of subsidies or bounties by Congress in money, public lands, bonds or by endorsement or by pledge of the public credit, to promote special private industries or enterprises, independent of the constitutional power of Congress, is unjust and impolitic and in manifest conflict with the spirit of republican institutions. And further resolves that in view of the present condition of the treasury, and because efficient and honest government can only be assured by the frugal expenditure of the public money, while unnecessary and lavish expenditure under any and all conditions leads inevitably to venal and corrupt methods in public affairs, no money ought to be appropriated by Congress, except such as is necessary to carry on the departments, frugally, efficiently and honestly administered.

The Republican party has, by its national legislation, given protection to certain classes, always at the expense of the masses; but it has persistently denied protection to one class, to which it might have been given without expense or injury to any honest man. The class referred to is the inventors, to whom the country owes so much, who have vainly implored Congress to amend the patent laws by making it a criminal offense to knowingly infringe a patent. Representative Tillman, Chairman of the House committee on Patents, is determined that the Democratic House shall have the honor of passing a bill complying with the inventors' wishes and breaking up the practice, now so common, of intentional infringment of successful patents by parties without financial responsibility.

The Senate Committee on Elections this week heard the contested cases of Claggett vs Dubois, of Idaho, and Davidson vs Call, of Florida. The hearings in both cases were mere formalities, it having been certain beforehand that the committee, almost unanimously, favored the sitting members, Dubois and Call.

Owing to the fact that the articles which will be affected by the separate tariff bills likely to be reported by the House Ways and Means committee are few in number, and that they have been so thoroughly discussed in the press, the committee has decided that it will be unnecessary to grant hearings to those interested in them, as it is not probable that a single new fact could be brought out.

Representative Harter, of Ohio, has introduced a bill to consolidate and reduce the number of Customs Collection districts in the country, which he thinks will improve the service and save $178,000 annually.

The Democrats of the House have already reached the why and wherefore stage of the session. They want to know why Secretary Foster has withheld the payment of some $80,000,000. appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30 last; also why some $33,000,000 less than should have been paid out of the appropriations for the current fiscal year, during its first half, ending Jan. 1, has been paid. These questions and others concerning Government finances may give the Secretary more trouble than the grip, from which he has just recovered, did.

The Democrats also wish to know just what effect the McKinley tariff law is having upon the country, and it is proposed, in order to obtain that information quickly, that the House committee on Manufacturers investigate its effect upon the general manufacturing interests, the committees on Agriculture, Labor and Commerce to do the same for those several interests. A Senate committee spent a part of last summer in making an investigation of this subject, but the House proposal would be much more thorough, consequently more satisfactory.

Speaker Crisp is expected to be well enough to preside over the House by next week.

A WATCH beats 157,680,000 times in a year. In the same length of time the wheels travel 3,558½ miles.

THE population of London is now 4,421,661. That of Paris, which comes next in the list of large cities, is 2,344,350.

THE famous Winchester elm in Boston, recently cut down, was full grown in 1660. The last treaty with the Indians was signed under it and it was the last of New England's historic elms.

CAPT. JOHN DAVIS, of Deer Isle, Me., was one of the crew of fifty-two who, serving without pay, sailed in the United States steamer Jamestown forty-three years ago to carry flour and grain to Ireland during the famine.

FORTY-FOUR states will participate in the presidential election of 1892, and 444 presidential electors will be chosen. The total popular vote was 10,000,000 in 1884, and 11,400,000 in 1888. This year, at the same ratio of increase, it will be 13,000,000, and the margin of majority on either side will be small.

A BEAUTIFUL and fertile country has just been opened up by the extension of the Great Northern railway to Kalispel, two hundred miles west from the main line. The Flathead valley is said to be one of the finest agricultural districts in Montana. It is expected to attract many thousands of settlers during the early spring months.

WILLIAM CLEMENTS, known as the "Last of the Whips," has just died at Canterbury, Eng., in his ninety-first year. He used to drive the famous "tallo-ho" coach between Canterbury and London and had many a tale of highwaymen to tell. The old man always declared that England began to degenerate with the introduction of the locomotive.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS has recently secured a place as clerk in the agricultural department for the daughter of his old master in the days of slavery. The lady was brought up in extreme luxury, but has for ten years experienced great privations; and when the case was presented to Secretary Rusk he appreciated its poetic and pathetic aspects.

WHEN we do have news from China it generally amounts to something, and when they fight the Celestials attend strictly to business. The Chinese authorities had a scrimmage with the rebels recently, and when the fighting ceased it was discovered that 2,000 insurgent Mongolians had bitten the dust. The government officials, however, didn't rest easy until they had beheaded fifty rebel leaders.

A FRENCH physician of eminence says that to keep away the grip: "Avoid fatigue, live well, dress warmly and keep dry, avoid all fogs." Yet it is a fact that the grip attacks most generally and severely people whose circumstances enable them to be idle, to eat the best of food and to wear ample clothing. It is a disease of the wealthy and pampered, not of the poor and squalid. How is this accounted for?

THE managers of the first railroad in the United States, which was opened for traffic in South Carolina in 1831, adopted an order that not over twenty-five persons should be carried in any car, and that the trains should run only at the rate of fifteen miles an hour with one passenger car, twelve miles an hour with two cars and ten miles an hour with three or more cars. Safety, not "get there," seemed to be the rule.

THE Indian Medical Gazette says that the Japanese, who some time ago abandoned cremation and adopted burial as the mode of disposing of their dead, have reverted to the old custom. They say they have made the retrograde change for sanitary reasons. Cremation bade fair a few years ago to become common if not fashionable here, but has dropped out of sight and out of mind with the great majority.

W. F. BURNS, of San Francisco, who was in Balmaceda's secret service, says the Chilian dictator's ambition was to unite all the South American states under his rule. Mr. Burns says the Chilians, whom he styled "the Yankees of South America," are honestly convinced that theirs is one of the greatest and most warlike nations in the world, and that their histories contain only accounts of the two wars in which the Chilians came out victorious—that with Spain in 1812 and that with Peru.

A SOUTHERN statesmen expresses it as his opinion that public men now are the equal in ability if not in reputation of those in the past. This is no doubt true. The average education of the people is higher in America now that it has ever been and hero worship has declined with the general advancement of the people. The newspapers now keep the public informed on all public questions, so that the voters at home know as much about the tariff and other legislation as does the statesman at Washington. There is less difference between the great man and his follower to-day.

THE very sudden death of Miss Julia Griffin at Niagara Falls, N. Y., recalls the fact that she was the first woman to receive a pension for her services as an army nurse during the late war. She served as a nurse in the war and was taken prisoner in the battle of Winchester, but was paroled. During her work in the field she contracted asthma. In April, 1888, a special act of congress was passed and signed by President Cleveland, allowing her a pension. She was born in Hudson, N. Y., April 30, 1832. Members of Dudley Donnelly post, 133, of Niagara Falls, acted as pall-bearers.

THE great corn belt has not remarkably changed in its salient features within the last few years. On the crop of 1891 Iowa leads with 9,560,000 acres and 251,000,000 bushels. Illinois is second with 7,011,000 acres and 235,000,000 bushels. Then follow in order Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Indiana and Tennesse, the latter being credited with 82,552,000 bushels. In oats Illinois takes the lead with 3,069,000 acres, and Iowa is second with 2,795,000 acres, the production being 111,000,000 and 102,500,000 bushels, respectively. Minnesota is the only other state in which the production of oats exceeded 50,000,000 bushels.

THE "SLASHER" CAUGHT.

The Perpetrator of Many Mysterious and Bloody Crimes in New York Arrested at His Sanguinary Occupation—He Had a Mania for Cutting the Throats of Drunken Men.

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—William Dowd was arraigned in the Tombs police court before Judge Duffy, charged with cutting the throat of William Miller at 3:30 o'clock of the same day, and was committed without bail. There is no doubt whatever that Dowd is the mysterous man who has come to be known in the vicinity of Oak Station house as "Jack the Slasher." Unquestionably it was he who early Friday morning murdered John Carson in Christie street. Carson was found lying lifeless on his back, his throat cut from ear to ear.

Dowd was arrested, red-handed, within two minutes from the time he committed his latest crime. Inspector Byrnes told Sunday afternoon how Dowd came to be arrested, and established beyond a doubt that he was a homicidal crank and that he was guilty of slashing William Miller early Sunday morning and John Clark January 9. He expected to prove, he said, that he killed Lawyer Carson in Christie street last Friday. These mysterious assaults on intoxicated men began in the lower part of the eleventh precinct and the upper part of the fourth precinct December 27. The victims were:

Dec. 28—James Helfin—The muscles of his neck were severed by a single blow of a knife or razor.

Jan. 2—George Wilson—Was found lying in Oliver street with his cheek laid open. He told the same story of a mysterious assailant that Helfin had told.

Jan. 8—Louis Lawson—Early in the morning a policeman discovered him bleeding from a gash across his nose and cheek. He could tell no more about his injuries and the way in which they had been received than Helfin and Wilson could of theirs.

Jan. 10—John Clark—He was found unconscious from loss of blood. He was slashed deeply in the left cheek and on the neck.

Jan. 13—John Donohue—He stated that he had been stabbed just below the heart. He showed the wound, which was not serious.

Jan. 15—John Carson—Found dead with his throat cut from ear to ear. This was the first fatality in the series.

Jan. 17—William Miller—Throat slashed.

After Clark had been slashed a plan to capture the slasher was agreed upon. Twenty detective sergeants and details of men in citizen's clothes were put on watch. One member of Capt. O'Connor's command who was sent out Saturday night disguised as an ordinary citizen was William H. Masterson. He was watching at New Bowery and Chambers street shortly after 8 o'clock and saw a man slouching along warily and watchfully on the other side of the street.

The officer shadowed him until at the corner of Oak and Roosevelt streets he saw him fix his attention on a man whose gait proclaimed him to be intoxicated. The drunkard staggered and supported himself by putting his hand on a railing. The man with the handkerchief looked in every direction for several seconds and then slouched toward the intoxicated man.

In the next three seconds Masterson saw the man with the handkerchief seize the other around the neck with his left hand, make a quick motion with the right hand, and dash across the street, while the drunkard fell to the walk. Then came a summons for help from Masterson, and he started in pursuit down Batavia street, followed by Officers McCrary, Weidemeyer and Carter. The fugitive was soon caught. When his right hand was drawn from his pocket it clutched a razor that was wet with blood.

While Masterson rushed the prisoner to the Oak street station house, near by, the other officers attended to the drunken man, who was bleeding from a gash in the throat, which was precisely the same, but not so deep, as the wound on Lawyer Carson. The prisoner had given his name as Henry G. Dowd, while his victim was recorded as William Miller, of No. 326 Cherry street.

Dowd was not disposed to talk at first. All he would say was that he acted in self-defense. Some man jostled him; he feared violence and used the razor.

Inspector Byrnes had several talks with him and finally Dowd made the admission that he was possessed by a mania that he could not control, and that was to kill "a Dutchman." He repeated this several times, and his most emphatic declaration was: "The only reason I have for doing this is to kill a Dutchman, and I'm looking for them all the time."

But while at one time Dowd admitted that this homicidal impulse made him attack Miller, and after admitting not only that Clark's identification of him was just and that he found a drunken man lying in Christie street Friday morning and cut his throat, and that he had committed many such crimes and had recorded them by day and date, and that some day he would make a full statement, he recanted and denied having committed such crimes or having made such statements.

Inspector Byrnes learned in Brooklyn that Dowd had been confined in the Flatbush insane asylum a number of years ago, but had escaped and had not been recaptured. He also found that he had been a prisoner in Sing Sing, sentenced to a five-year term for cutting a man in New York, but had been pardoned through the intercession of some prominent people in New York after he had served a two-years' term.

AU SABLE, Mich., Jan. 18.—The most destructive fire Au Sable has suffered started in the dry goods store of Dan Rosenthal & Co. at 8:15 Friday evening and was not got under control until 1 o'clock in the morning, after twenty-five buildings had been burned. The thermometer stood at zero and this greatly retarded work. The heaviest losers are D. Rosenthal & Co., $30,000, and Wilcox & Richards, $20,000. The total loss on buildings and stocks is estimated at $80,000; partly insured.

POWDER MILLS BLOWN UP.

A Disastrous Explosion at Kellogg, W. Va.—Five Men Killed and Many Hurt.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 19.—Specials from the cities near Ceredo, W. Va., tell the news of a terrific explosion of the Phœnix powder mills, destructive to life, Monday morning. The Phœnix mills are situated at Central City, near Ceredo, and about half way between Huntington, W. Va., and Catlettsburg, Ky. This is the third explosion at these mills within three months, and is by all odds the most destructive one.

At 8:30 o'clock Monday morning people in Ironton, 25 miles away, heard the terrible detonating roar. In Ceredo, 3 miles away, windows were broken and wares in the stores were shaken from the shelves. In Catlettsburg, nearly 10 miles away, the earth shook and people were alarmed. Everybody divined the cause and there was a rush from all directions to the scene. The local authorities organized and surrounded the ruins with a cordon of police, through which none of the thousands of spectators was permitted to pass.

It has been ascertained that the first explosion was in the glazing mill, where there were ten tons of powder. Then successively the packing house, the magazine and the four wheel mills and lastly a car loaded with gunpowder went hurling in fiery fragments through the air. Not a vestige of the entire plant remains and the country for half a mile around is strewn with fragments of the buildings and of the bodies of the five men, victims of the disaster. It is not known definitely, but at the present writing it is believed that not less than thirty-five tons of powder were burned in the several explosions.

SHOT HIS YOUNG WIFE.

Double Tragedy at Peoria, Ill.—Harry Johnson, After Murdering His Wife, Blows His Own Brains Out.

PEORIA, Ill., Jan. 19.—A terrible tragedy was enacted at the residence of Mrs. Sarah Laforce on Glendale avenue Sunday night, when her only daughter was shot and killed by her brutal husband, who then killed himself. Harry Johnson and Lizzie Laforce were married in Chicago four months ago. The young husband immediately began a course of systematic cruelty towards his wife which resulted in her leaving him and thereafter steadfastly refusing to live with him. Mrs. Johnson returned to her mother's home in this city and Johnson came soon afterwards.

Monday he went to the house twice and was refused admittance. In the evening, while Mrs. Laforce and her daughter were upstairs eating supper, Johnson entered the house and went up to their room. He chatted pleasantly and his mother-in-law started out of the room to have his supper brought in. As soon as she closed the door Johnson drew a revolver and shot his wife twice. The first shot struck her in the left temple and passed nearly through her head and the second one pierced her right wrist. Johnson then placed the pistol to his right temple and shot his brains out.

ENLARGING THE TERRITORY.

Oklahoma Actively Preparing to Be Admitted to Statehood.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan. 19.—Warren G. Sayre, of the Cherokee Indian commission, says that the commission has just closed negotiations for the purchase of 90,000 acres of land from the Tonhawas and Cherokees. This land includes a part of what is known as the Cherokee strip, and connects the original Oklahoma territory with the states. He says the commission has purchased 13,000,000 acres of land for the government at a cost of $12,000,000, and that the original Oklahoma territory has been increased in size until it is now as large as Indiana. He thinks Oklahoma will have 400,000 population by the time the next president is inaugurated, and that it will then become a state.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

Killed by Falling into a Well.

Sarah Munson, a daughter of Peter Munson, living a farm near Luverne, met with a peculiar death. The young lady was subject to fits, and while hauling water from a well with a rope she was suddenly taken with a fit and fell head first into the well. Her fall was witnessed by her mother and sisters, who succeeded in taking the girl from the water before she was dead. The shock, however, was too great, and she died about an hour after the accident.

St. Paul Stock Yards.

During the year 1891 58,608 cattle and calves passed over the scales at the union stock yards in St. Paul, weighing 59,298,024 pounds, an average of 858 pounds per head; 235,210 hogs were sold and weighed, aggregating 69,980,760 pounds, an average of 226 pounds per head; 49,321 head of sheep weighed 49,321 pounds, average 86 pounds per head. Another Asylum Needed.

The state board of corrections and charities at its quarterly meeting in Minneapolis considered the question of providing for the great increase in the number of insane patients. Secretary Hart showed them that at the present rate there would be over 3,000 to care for by 1895 or 1,000 for each asylum. A fourth asylum is needed and a committee was named to consider the question.

A Courthouse Burned.

Lyon county's new courthouse at Marshall was burned. It was begun last summer and cost about $30,000. It was nearly completed, but had not been accepted. Contractor Smith had, however, drawn all of the contract price but $1,600. The insurance, $18,000, runs to the county. This will probably rebuild it, as the walls were not much injured.

Eloped with a Marshal.

May Newman, a 14-year-old girl who had been working in the Germania house at Crookston for the past month, and George Schoonover, who claimed to be a special United States deputy marshal, have disappeared, and it was thought they had eloped. The girl's parents were notified that she had left, and they were nearly distracted over the affair.

When picked up he was alive, but he only lived a short time.

How A Nurse in a Russian Family Received the Young Master's American Wife.

A very interesting talker is Count Eugene de Mitelewicz, who resides with his family in a fashionable uptown boarding house. The count is very popular among the guests, he is a good story-teller, and is heard at his best when he is relating tales of Russian domestic life.

"Shortly after my marriage," said he to a circle of listeners the other evening, "I went with my wife to visit my home in Russia. Now, you must know that in certain parts of Russia the lower classes know as little about this country as they do about the moon. Particularly was this so at the time of which I speak.

"Our family had, at that time, a nurse in their employ who came from somewhere east of Moscow. She had been told that far away America was peopled with colored folks, and naturally, when she heard that 'the young master' was returning home with an American wife, she concluded that I had married a colored woman.

"This nurse, among her other accomplishments, spoke French fluently. She was an imaginative creature and something of a poetess. She felt that it would be incumbent on her to do something toward welcoming my wife home. Accordingly she wrote a poem in her honor.

"This poem, tastefully decorated with black ribbons, was handed to me upon my arrival. And what do you think was the title of this poem? Simply this:

"'A la belle Affricaine.'

"That was a staggerer, you may be sure. Mutual explanations, however, followed, and the nurse, during our stay, was ever at my wife's side ready to pay her homage."—N. Y. World.

Miss Wayback—Who's dead, ma?

Mrs. Wayback—No one as I knows on. What makes ye think some one is dead?

Miss Wayback—Pa is brushin' his hat.—Good News.

Ward off disease by removing the cause of it. It's with the liver or the blood, nine times out of ten. A sluggish liver makes bad blood—and bad blood makes trouble. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery makes pure blood. It invigorates the liver and kidneys, rouses every organ into healthful action, and cleanses and renews the whole system. Through the blood it cures. For Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Scrofulous, Skin and Scalp Diseases—even Consumption (or Lung-scrofula) in its earlier stages, it's a certain remedy.

Nothing else is "just as good." Anything "just as good" could be sold just as this is. It's the only blood-purifier that's guaranteed to benefit or cure, in every case, or the money is refunded.

The catarrh that isn't cured costs $500. Not to you, but to the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. They promise to pay you the money, if you have an incurable case.

They don't believe that you have one.

"German Syrup"

Here is something from Mr. Frank A. Hale, proprietor of the De Witt House, Lewiston, and the Tontine Hotel, Brunswick, Me. Hotel men meet the world as it comes and goes, and are not slow in sizing people and things up for what they are worth. He says that he has lost a father and several brothers and sisters from Pulmonary Consumption, and is himself frequently troubled with colds, and he often coughs enough to make him sick at his stomach. Whenever he has taken cold of this kind he uses Boschee's German Syrup, and it cures him every time. Here is a man who knows the full danger of lung troubles, and would therefore be most particular as to the medicine he used. What is his opinion? Listen! "I use nothing but Boschee's German Syrup, and have advised, I presume, more than a hundred different persons to take it. They agree with me that it is the best cough syrup in the market." ①

WOMAN'S WAY.

IT WAS two bold knights errant,
they rode forth to take the air;
They were seeking for adventures, anywhere and everywhere;
One was aged and experienced, and one was young and brash;
The Experienced was prudent, the Inexperienced rash.
And presently they came upon a couple unaware—
A huge and hideous monster, who beat a lady fair.
He was great and grim and terrible, a bulbous, bloated brute,
With hairy hands and nose that shamed the beet's ensanguined root;
He was knobbed and gnarled and twisted, like a huge misshapen tree;
And the young man's heart waxed furious to see what he did see.
For the brute he banged the lady till one trembled for her life;
And when they asked him why, he said: "Oh, nothing—she's my wife."

The knight errant of Experience, he made a bow politic;
Said he: "A family affair? Excuse me, sir—good night!
Excuse me if I cannot stay—I think I'll hurry on!"
"Shame!" cried the Inexperienced knight; but the older knight was gone.
So the young knight laid his lance in rest, and his youthful heart uprose;
And he charged upon the monster, and just touched his mighty nose;

WITH ONE TREMENDOUS THRUST.

And the monster reached out for him and with one tremendous thrust
He knocked the good knight off his horse, and laid him in the dust;
And twenty minutes later that young knight slowly woke
And lay a-counting up the bones and things that monster broke;
And as he wondered at the meed of brave knight errantree,
He saw the lady sitting on that horrid monster's knee.

She laid her dainty fingers, as she sat in loving pose,
On a scratch, all but invisible, upon that monster's nose;
Her tender, soothing accents had a sweet and silvery ring:
"Did the nassy man scratch hubby's nose, oo pitty itty sing?
He was a nassy wicked man, to give her huuby pain;
Just let his tweetums kiss the place, and make it well again!"

THE YOUTHFUL KNIGHT WENT ON HIS WAY.

When the youthful knight went on his way, he was exceeding sore;
But he knew a great big spreading lot more than he did before.

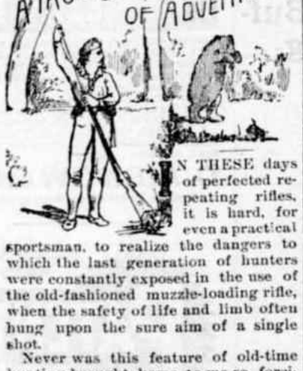
THE SUCK "SUG."

A TRUE STORY OF ADVENTURE.



IN THESE days of perfected repeating rifles, it is hard, for even a practical sportsman, to realize the dangers to which the last generation of hunters were constantly exposed in the use of the old-fashioned muzzle-loading rifle, when the safety of life and limb often hung upon the sure aim of a single shot.

Never was this feature of old-time hunting brought home to me so forcibly, as when, a short time since, I sat in a cabin on old La Pointe Island, Lake Superior, upon a bootjack, laid across the top of an empty nail keg, and listened to the recital of an adventure, in the forests of the Upper Peninsula of Michigan, by one of the last of the old line of the American Fur Company's trappers.

I will give it to you as it fell from his lips:

"Yes," said old Capt. Angus, "I did have a scrape with a bear, once; and in rather close quarters, too."

"In them days our rifles were all muzzle-loaders, with ramrod under the barrel and patch box in the stock. Your round balls and pointed slugs were usually carried in the pocket, and the powder flask at the belt.

"I carried as good a gun as there was in the woods; and what I have to tell you is nothing against that particular gun, but its failing was common to its kind.

"One morning I made the regular rounds of my traps and had took up an uncommon fine pack of Martin, otter and beaver pelts.

"Maybe, as I trudged along through the woods, I was thinking a little more of my morning's good luck than I was of what was going on around me

"At any rate, when I looked up and glanced a little ways ahead of me, I saw as big a bear setting straight up in my path as ever I laid eyes on.

"It was so sudden-like that when I waked up to the situation it made me feel so sort o' foolish and unstrung that I 'most believe I would have stood stock still and seen that bear walk off and leave me if he had offered to.

"But he didn't show any symptoms of that kind of weakness — not to speak of! So I made up my mind that the sooner I could get the drop on him the healthier it would be for me.

"Just as I drew a bead on him and pulled the trigger he turned his head in such a way that the ball tore through his nose.

"For a minute he grabbed his nose in both paws and held it there just long enough to let me pour a charge of powder down my gun and fit a patch and slug over the muzzle and whip out the ramrod and start to crowd them down.

"A slug, on account of its conical shape, requires greater care in loading than a round ball, and unless its started exactly right its liable to stick before you get it down.

"My haste to get the second charge into the wounded bear before he quit nursing his nose and turned his attention to me, betrayed me into starting the slug a little out of true; and by the time I had rammed it half way down the barrel, it stuck fast, and I couldn't budge it to save my life!

"While I was crowding the ramrod with all my strength, the bear dropped on all-fours and made a rush at me.

"A hurt bear can get over ground about as lively as anything I'm acquainted with, and I had scarcely time to drop my gun and take to my heels before he was close in my tracks, gaining on me at every canter.

"I saw that it was no use trying to outrun him, and that I must depend upon some other shift for my life.

"When the old fellow was close upon me, I dodged behind a big pine, and jerked my hatchet, which was as sharp as a razor, from my belt.

"The bear reared up on his haunches, threw his arms about the tree, and began to hip-i-ty-hop around after me.

"Then the music began in earnest! The tree was a big one, and there was just room enough for me to operate in, between the ends of his outstretched paws, into which I plied the keen edge of my hatchet as often as circumstances would permit.

"This, of course, increased his fury and the speed with which he hopped around the tree after me. But I managed to dance our 'Ring-around-the Rosy' as lively as he did.

"How long we kept the jig up I don t know—but it was long enough, I can tell you that!

"His left paw was hacked up into

OUR RING-AROUND-THE-ROSY.

mincemeat before he began to show any signs of weakening, but I knew that the loss of blood was bound to tell on him, sooner or later. And it did; for after awhile he began to lag a little.

"This gave me a chance to shift my hatchet into my left hand and play it onto his other paw. This left-handed work was a little awkward for me, of course, but a mighty sight more so for him!

"It fired him up again, with new enthusiasm, when the hatchet started in on a fresh spot; and for a minute or two, things were about as lively as when the ball opened.

"But he soon tamed down, and his snarls and growls grew weaker and weaker.

"The tree, and a circle around it were daubed and drenched with blood, and so were my clothes.

"When the old chap had grown so weak that he could hardly hold up his end of the dance, I concluded that he would find it still harder work to travel. So I lit out for the spot where I had dropped my gun.

"The bear started to follow me, but found it too hard work to walk on his stubbs of fore paws, and sat up on his haunches again in so pitiful a plight that I was almost sorry for him.

"Picking up my gun I took off the cap to the 'wormer' of the ramrod, which was made specially sharp and strong, and with it drew the stuck slug out.

"Then I carefully reloaded, steadied my aim against a tree—for the excitement had made my arms rather shakey—and shot him through the heart as he stood licking his paws.

"After skinning him I hurried to camp, got my tote sled and hauled all the best of him back to camp with me, and it was no small load either, for he was the biggest bear I ever had any track with!

"But, you see, I never would have had such a scrape getting him if I had had a modern repeating rifle instead of an old muzzle-loader."

FORREST CRISSEY.

The Leather of the Egyptians.

The ancient Egyptians were skilled in the art of tanning leather and manufactured it in various ways and for various purposes besides that of furnishing covering for the feet. Indeed, it is to those builders of the pyramids that we are indebted for the first artistic forms of foot-wear and so far as can be ascertained from history and the researches of archæologists the Egyptains were the first shoe-makers who were worthy of the name. It is a fact, too, that tanners of to-day employ very much the same methods as did the ancients. About the same materials are used and the processes are almost precisely similar to those in vogue hundreds of years ago. It is true that tanners of the present day have found means of greatly shortening the time required to convert a hide into leather and that steam power and modern machinery have done much to expedite and improve the processes of finishing the leather; but, after all, the principles of tanning remain the same as they have been from the first. —N. Y. Advertiser.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Sour Milk Cake: One cupful each of butter and sour milk, two cupfuls of sugar, four cupfuls of flour, four eggs, one teaspoonful of soda; put in the milk, nutmeg, one and one-half cupfuls of raisins or currants.—Good Housekeeping.

—A good dish of orange fritters can be made by taking four oranges, peel them, taking off all the white pith without breaking into the pulp; divide in four or five pieces, through natural divisions of the orange; dip each piece into common batter, and fry in hot lard. Serve on napkin with powdered sugar.—Ladies' Home Journal.

—Baked Fish: Spread some butter over a dripping pan, sprinkle over it one onion minced fine, lay on this a thin slice of halibut or any small, whole fish, split down the middle. Add one tablespoon of vinegar and spread thickly with butter. Bake until done, the time depending upon the thickness of the fish. Remove to a platter. Add flour to the butter left in the pan, and when well mixed add water until it is the desired consistency; add three or four minced mushrooms or pickles. Pour this over the fish. Garnish with lemon points and parsley.—Boston Budget.

—Candied rose leaves for table decorations: A mold of snow-white blanemange made of whipped cream stiffened with gelatine or isinglass is very ornamental served on a low crystal platter, wreathed with whipped cream, tinted a delicate rose color with a drop or two of cochineal, and scattered with candied rose leaves. Or the blanemange itself may be tinted rose color and wreathed with the candied rose petals. It will be none the less wholesome and delicious because it seems almost too dainty to be eaten.

—In really quaint, old-fashioned houses it is very much in keeping to have suggestive phrases over the fireplaces. In one such house in New England is inscribed over the library andirons: "Old wood to burn, old books to read, old friends to talk," and in the dining-room the cheer of the family altar is sung in Scotch phrase: "East, west, hame's the best." That these inscriptions are not common is evidenced by a story concerning the latter. A lady entering the dining-room at once noticed the lettering. "Ah," she said, reading, "what is this? 'East, west, ham's the best.' That's so—ham is good; I quite agree with you," she finished, turning with a smile to her amused listener.—N. Y. Times.

—Raisin Cake: One cupful of butter, rubbed to a cream, with two cupfuls of powdered sugar. Beat up separately the yolks of five and the whites of four eggs, and to the yolks add one cupful of milk, and pour it into the butter and sugar; now add the juice and grated rind of half an orange and half a lemon and quarter of a teaspoon of salt; put in two cupfuls of flower and one-half cup of corn starch, sifted together with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder; beat well, and put in one cupful of stoned raisins, and lastly the beaten whites; bake in one large, square cake or two small ones, and when done cover with an icing made of the extra whites and flavored with rose water.—Household Monthly.

—Partridges: If you can procure partridges, ruffled grouse, quail or widgeon, which latter, when it has fed upon wild celery, becomes almost equal to canvasback, you can afford to let the turkey you had destined for your table go to market. There is nothing so easily cooked as a partridge. There is no dressing to be made. You require only the hottest of ovens and the ability to lard the breast with strips of fat pork, which is more easily done if it be first exposed for a few moments to a brisk fire to stiffen. Then bake twenty-five minutes, or if you do not pride yourself upon your epicureanism, you can give it ten minutes more. Garnish the dish with neat squares of toast and little mounds of water cress, and serve a brown sauce made by thickening the gravy in the pan, or a celery or bread sauce. Celery and currant jelly must, of course, grace the table.—American Agriculturist.

Nature's Defenses.

An impoverished state of the blood is just as dangerous as a gross state; either will give germs which may be taken in a chance to prey upon the body. Boils, cancer, scrofula and the like were formerly considered as "blood diseases;" now we understand that instead of arising from impurities of the blood, they are the result of conditions of the system in which the body is unable to defend itself from germs which may attack it. The white blood corpuscles are the sentries of the body, whose duty it is to capture and destroy all invading microbes. An insufficient diet, a cold or anything which impoverishes the blood or weakens the tissues, weakens these natural defenses against disease. Hence to avoid disease one has only to keep up the tone of the bodily health by giving due attention to diet, exercise and sleep, and to avoid exposures, hardships and dissipations which impair physicial vigor. Nature intended us to be well, and we will be if we obey her laws.—From a Lecture by Dr. J. H. Kellogg.

Ornamental Tarts.

Cranberry tarts were undoubtedly the famou starts which the Queen of Hearts made, and which caused such disgraceful scandals in court circles. Every child who has eaten these tarts on his birthday table is reminded of the old rhyme. Nothing makes a more dainty tart than cranberries. Prepare pastry shells not over two or two and a half inches in diameter, from puff paste. Prick them on the bottom thoroughly to prevent them from rising, as puff paste will, if left to its own devices, in an uneven and unseemly manner. The edges, of course, must be left to rise as they please. Fill each tart with a tablespoonful of cranberries, after the shells are cold and the cranberries are hot. Set them away to grow cold. There is nothing more ornamental on a birthday table than a dish of these tarts, piled up and surrounded by a wreath of green leaves.—N. Y. Tribune.

—The postage stamp will be fifty-two years old in May of next year. Its inventor was a printer—James Chalmers, of Dundee, Scotland, who died in 1853. England, fifty-two years ago, introduced the new system of prepaying letter postage, and, according to a decree of December 21, 1839, issued the first stamps, which were to be put before the public on May 6 of the following year, as noted above. A year later they were introduced in the United States and Switzerland, and within three years had become common in Bavaria, Belgium and France.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Charles Frchman, the successful theatrical manager, is quoted as saying: "When you see me well-dressed you may know I am in hard luck; when my clothing is careless you may be sure that money is coming easy."

—Mr. Spurgeon's works have been translated into the Norse language. At Christiana colporteurs have circulated upward of 87,600 copies of his sermons alone. His British colportage association reports that there are ninety colporteurs now engaged. Last year they sold $50,000 worth of literature and took part in 10,246 services or meetings.

—When in Minneapolis, Julia Ward Howe, being requested to give the origin of the battle hymn of the republic, said that one day during the war some one asked why she did not write new words to the tune of "John Brown." She answered that she had been thinking of it. When she awoke, the next morning, the hymn introduced itself and she wrote it as it came.

—During his residence in Chicago, as commander of the Missouri division of the army, Gen. Nelson A. Miles has become very popular in society. He is a success as an after-dinner talker, and appears to a great advantage in a drawing-room as on an Indian scouting expedition. His splendid physique makes him a conspicuous figure in any gathering. In athletic circles Gen. Miles has the reputation of being a skilful and plucky boxer.

—Her majesty the empress of Japan is hedged about with many stately observances. When she drives abroad all business is suspended in the streets through which she passes and not a sound is heard. No one is allowed to gaze at the royal procession through the windows or chinks in the door, but occupants of houses by which she passes must seat themselves respectfully outside the doors and doff the hat. European women, however, are allowed to retain their head covering.

—One of the wearers of the Royal Red Cross, the decoration bestowed by Queen Victoria for an act of heroism performed by a woman, is Lady Roberts, the wife of Gen. Sir Frederick Roberts, whose fame dates back to the Sepoy mutiny. Lady Roberts is an energetic worker in promoting the efficiency of the government system of army nursing introduced by the duke of Connaught. She also collects and distributes what is known as the "Lady Roberts Fund," by means of which nurses have been stationed in different parts of India. Lady Roberts has also established an officers' hospital at Murree.

—The ameer of Afghanistan can forgive a man who steals the public moneys, but he has no mercy on a literary thief who purloins verses from the ameer's favorite poets. A few months ago an official was brought before him for trial on a charge of robbing the treasury. During the investigation it was proven that the fellow was a poetaster, and likewise a great plagiarist. "I may not punish him for the thefts of public money," said the ameer, "but I can not pardon him for literary thefts from the works of saintly poets like Saadi and Hafiz." So the ameer ordered the tongue of the poor wretch to be perforated by long needles, and this remarkable sentence was carried out at once.

HUMOROUS.

—"Who wrote the Psalms?" asked the superintendent, severely. And then a little girl in the infant class began to cry. "It wasn't me, sir," she said.—Tid-Bits.

—Love's Language.—Jack—"Love's language is the language of the eyes." Tom (gloomily)—"It may be, but I confess I have found it to be chiefly a language of 'Nos.'"—N. Y. Herald.

—An Encouraging Change.—Tramp—"Please, mum, I'm nearly starved, mum. I'm so weak I can hardly crawl." Housekeeper—"Tramps in that condition are not so dangerous as the other sort. Go on with your starving, please."—Street & Smith's Good News.

—Mrs. Henpecker (with terrible majesty)—"What were you fumbling so long for at that keyhole?" Mr. H. (trembling in every limb)—"My love, you know I can't see without my glasses." Mrs. H.—"Glasses! You've had enough glasses to see twenty keyholes."—Fun.

—The Last Resort.—Mrs. Wickstaff—"My dear, this ribbon you have brought home for Fido is a shade too light." Wickstaff—"All right. I'll try it over." Mrs. Wickstaff (the next day)—"My dear, I'm sorry, but the ribbon you have brought home to-day is a shade too dark." Wickstaff (wearily)—"Then wait until to-morrow and I'll change the dog."—Demorest's Magazine.

—"Yes, it's interesting to think of the old school days," said the man with a reminiscent tendency. "You were a great hand at seven-up, but I never thought you'd make a book-publisher. Biles was about the smartest and most studious man in the class. Wonder what's become of him." "Biles? He is in my establishment. He earns a small salary making translations for me."—Washington Star.

—The Old Man's Hint.—Materfamilias (11 p. m.)—"What's the matter? You look distressed." Paterfamilias—"I thought it about time to give that young fellow in the parlor a vigorous hint that it was nearing midnight, so I walked right into the room, and, giving both him and our daughter a severe look, I deliberately turned out the gas." "Mercy! Didn't he get angry?" "No; he said 'Thank you.'"—N. Y. Weekly.

—Mr. Greeley was in the habit on Sundays, after church, of going down to the Tribune office to examine his exchanges. It was a cold day in winter, and the janitor, looking in, found him huddled up close to the radiator, poring over his papers, evidently enjoying the warmth. A very visible smile was on the janitor's face when he exclaimed to the distinguished editor: "Didn't you know that there was no heat in the building on Sundays?" "No," thundered Greeley; "I shall be cold the rest of the afternoon now." And he went on with his exchanges.

—Not the Position He Wanted.—Artemus Bigghed, B. Sc., Ph. D.—"Here I am back from Europe. Highest honors at Lepstick university, published a monograph on electricity which tells exactly what it is, and all about it, you know. Now I'm looking for a chair—don't want any small place—bound to be in the scientific swim, if there's any way to get there. What do you say? What place shall I strike for?" Coolberg Quiet—"Why don't you try for that electrical chair in New York? You'd be sure to get right into the current then. It's a good position, too."—Boston Post.

RUSHING FOR THE LAND.

One of the chief explanations of the increasing popularity of the northwest of this continent for farming operations is the diversity of country which it offers. Nature has so fashioned it that every branch of farming in the temperate zone has been provided with a locality. And the extent of country adapted to agriculture is a revelation to those who not many years ago thought that Minnesota was the boundary of agricultural land and that wheat-growing was doubtful even in Minnesota. Beyond Minnesota, across the boundary, the Canadian territories of Manitoba, Assiniboia, Alberta and Saskatchewan are claiming pre-eminence in wheat, in cattle raising, and in mixed farming. Manitoba this year has outstripped the rest of the world in the quantity and quality of her harvest. Assiniboia, though more sparsely settled, makes a proportionately good showing, and Alberta is not only increasing the number and quality of the beeves shipped to Europe, but is importing young steers from the East to be fattened on the rich grasses of the country, which ripen early and remain juicy and sustaining throughout the moderate winter of those plateaux. Now a new and extensive area has been thrown open to homesteading. Two railways have been recently opened into the Saskatchewan country, and those who have been farming in the neighborhood of the old Hudson's Bay posts claim, and apparently with some justice, that their country surpasses even Manitoba and eastern Assiniboia; that it is the garden of the Northwest. It is no wonder that Eastern Canadians are selling out to take advantage of the free land to be obtained in these rich districts. The investigating parties that have been sent to spy out the land have reported so favorably upon it, that the desire to obtain a homestead in the Western Canadian Provinces is spreading far beyond the limits of Canada itself. There are a number of delegates in the west preparing the way for companies of intending immigrants who will move in the spring, and it is becoming more and more evident that Canada west of Lake Superior is becoming the heart of the Dominion, and that Winnipeg, though not the official capital, will be the most important city.

HOISTING A SAFE.

Phonographic Report of a Dialogue in Chestnut Street.

He was an elderly gentleman, with a Micawber-like appearance. He stood looking at a number of men engaged in hoisting a heavy safe into the fifth story of a large building on Chestnut street the other afternoon.

After gazing for some time at the tackle that was being arranged, he accosted the man who was directing the work and said:

"Will you let me speak to you a minute, young man?"

"In a few minutes; I'm busy now," replied the rigger.

"But it is important that I should speak to you at once," persisted the old fellow.

"Very well," exclaimed the other, impatiently. "Hold on, Dan. Now, then, what is it?"

"Do you think it is safe to attempt to lower that safe up your way?" inquired the "crank," hesitatingly.

"Certainly! I know my business."

"That's all very well, young man; but I'm a leetle bit older'n you an' know more about this world'n you do."

"Yes; all right!" shouted the rigger. "Go ahead, Dan."

"But hold on, young man. I have a better way. If you will let me show you—"

"Stand back there, please."

"Yes. But I'm afraid you will let that thing drop an' hurt somebody."

"No danger."

"Now just wait. I will just throw that rope over your what-do-you-call-it an' then bring it through the thing-um-bob I think—"

"I think you are a blasted old crank!"

"What! Young man—"

"Stand back, old fossil!" shouted the rigger, "or we'll drop the axmaravelous, as you would call it, on your head."

"You impudent young rascal! You should know better than to address a man old enough to be your father in that manner. Will you try my way?"

"No! That settles it, old stick-in-the-mud. Get out of the way."

"Hum! Fiddlesticks! Young men these days know too much for their breeches anyhow. All right! All right! You folks had better git far back. That wild, impudent boy will let that thing drop as sure as guns are made of iron. If he would only try my way he might save life and labor. But I've warned him."

And he retired to the rear to await developments.—Philadelphia Press.

—There is talk of forming a yacht club in Canada of New Yorkers. There should be no difficulty in doing so. There are plenty of "skippers" up there.—Yonkers Statesman.

A Big Regular Army.

The mightiest host of this sort is the army of invalids whose bowels, livers and stomachs have been regulated by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. A regular habit of body is brought about through using the Bitters, not by violently agitating and griping the intestines, but by reinforcing their energy and causing a flow of the bile into its proper channel. Malaria, la grippe, dyspepsia, and a tendency to inactivity of the kidneys, are conquered by the Bitters.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

My little girl suffered for three years from a large Abscess on her hip, the result of a fall and dislocation. The Abscess was large, with six openings, all of which discharged pus. I was induced by friends to give her S. S. S., and by the time the fifth bottle was finished the Abscess was entirely healed, and the child was well and happy.—MRS. J. A. WIEGNER, Slatington, Pa.

I had three little girls who were attacked with obstinate ECZEMA, or Blood Trouble, which at first resembled heat, but soon grew to yellow blisters, some of them quite large. One of the children died from the effects of it, but we got Swift's Specific and gave to the other two, and they soon got well. S. S. S. forced out the poison promptly. The cure was wonderful.—J. D. DONALD KENNEDY

Of Roxbury, Mass., Says:

Strange cases cured by my Medical Discovery come to me every day. Here is one of Paralysis—Blindness—and the Grip. Now how does my Medical Discovery cure all these? I don't know, unless it takes hold of the Hidden Poison that makes all Humor.

VIRGINIA CITY, NEVADA, Sept. 8th, 1891.

Donald Kennedy—Dear Sir: I will state my case to you: About nine years ago I was paralyzed in my left side, and the best doctors gave me no relief for two years, and I was advised to try your Discovery, which did its duty, and in a few months I was restored to health. About four years ago I became blind in my left eye by a spotted cataract. Last March I was taken with La Grippe, and was confined to my bed for three months. At the end of that time, as in the start, then it struck me that your Discovery was the thing for me; so I got a bottle, and before it was half gone I was able to go to my work in the mines. Now in regard to my eyes, as I lost my left eye, and about six months ago my right eye became affected with black spots over the sight as did the left eye—perhaps some twenty of them—but since I have been using your Discovery they all left my right eye but one; and, thank God, the bright light of heaven is once more making its appearance in my left eye. I am wonderfully astonished at it, and thank God and your Medical Discovery. Yours truly, HANK WHITE.

DELANO DIARY.

Subscribe for the BUFFALO GAZETTE.

—The M. E. sociable at Mrs. Johnson's on Friday night was quite well attended.

—The school board at their meeting on Saturday week, let the wood contract to Louis Strauch.

—36 degrees below zero can keep the street corners freer from loafers than could a metropolitan police force.

—Dave McLeod Sundayed with friends at Delano. He says bridge building is rather a cold job this time of year.

—Mr. Frank Flenner, at one time a resident of this place, died at Excelsior, of consumption, on the 14th, and was buried at Minneapolis on the 16th inst. Mrs. Flenner lives at Excelsior.

—Old settlers who saw J. D. Young, on Monday morning, with the thermometer at 24 deg below, strike out with a cutter for Lester Prairie, think although he is growing old, he is about as "tough as he used to be."

—M. A. O'Hair is spending his odd time in breaking his youngest colt. He will soon be a three horse lawyer. Altogether likely he will be riging up a tandem team, in order to have each horse earn his share of the oats.

—Delano would be a good place for some enterprising individuals to establish evening classes in vocal music and pennmanship and perhaps other branches could be taught with profit to our villagers and the teacher.

—The new janitor at the M. E. church deserves credit for having the building quite comfortably warmed on Sunday evening last while the thermometers outside were registering about the coldest weather of the season.

—Miss Maxfield, of Benson, came down on the Monday morning train to visit with her uncle, L. M., at this place. She reports the temperature as having been 32 deg. below at 1 o'clock a. m. when she boarded the train at Benson. It was 24 below at this place.

—The cases of scarlet fever at the house of John Gohl on the west side, and at A. Teichner's in the town of Franklin are still under quarantine, the patients not having sufficiently recovered to permit the disinfection of the house as required by law.

—We are informed that Thomas Worthy an old and respected citizen of the town of Franklin has sold his 80 acres farm, on the Buffalo road, for $3200.00, to Peter Schaust, who will have a nice home. Mr. W. will seek a new residence in the "Sunny South."

—Rev. Davies was somewhat under the weather on Sunday evening, consequently did not give his sermon on, "Am I my brother's keeper?" reserving it for next Sunday evening.

LATER.—The minister is down with LaGrippe and cannot fill his appointments next Sabbath.

—Sunday evening about 7 o'clock the fire alarm rang out, calling the firemen and citizens out to see who was destined to move out from their warm home on short notice on so cold a night. It turned out to be the chimney on the residence of Editor Buckley that was being unceremoniously cleaned. The boys say C. J. was rushing around with a lantern hunting the fire not being aware that it was overhead.

—The thermometers have been toying among the twenties for several nights, rising some as the sun warmed up the earth during the day until on Monday night they slipped down another notch so that early risers on Tuesday morning found them registering 36 degrees below zero. This is sufficiently low to satisfy the love of the oldest inhabitants for the good bracing atmospheres of early Minnesota days.

—The Swedish sociable at Olaf Peterson's farm residence on Saturday evening was a grand success, about 100 people being present. The sleighing was good, the moon bright, and weather fine for an occasion of the kind and being about the proper distance from town for a nice sleigh ride many young people improved their opportunity to enjoy the evening with Mr. Peterson and family who are experts in making visitors feel at home.

—Complaint has been made, that some of the young people in the southwestern part of Franklin township do not "observe the Sabbaeh day, to keep it holy," as they should, and that on last Sunday a dance was held where beer flowed freely and later on considerable blood was spilled. These young people must not wax so hilarious or they may have to answer a complaint before some officer of the peace. Take heed young folks, and be warned in time.

—Considerable complaint is made by patrons of the public school about keeping pupils in after school hours. Many children have quite a distance to travel and are obliged to go in some instances quite a number of minutes after 4 o'clock, when the weather is growing rapidly colder, towards night, and at a time when they should be at home doing their evening chores. Teachers should endeaver to finish the exercises and send the children home promptly at 4 o'clock as well as to be on hand and begin school at 9 a. m.

—Albert Mayer, a school teacher living about a mile from Watertown died on Wednesday.

—Great Northern trains have been several hours late in the morning, from the west this week.

—President Geo. P. Schaffer was unable to attend council meeting on Monday evening last, on account of sickness.

—The new scenery recently placed in position in the city hall shows off nicely and will aid materially in the presenting of plays in the future.

—The young ladies of the Catholic church society gave a pleasant and profitable supper at the City Hall on Wednesday evening. Reciepts about $50.00.

—Those harmonious strains so frequently heard by pedestrians on R. R. avenue exude from the beautiful new piano placed this week in the parlor of village Recorder, Hitz.

—Owing to the coldness of the night not many went from this vicinity to hear John G. Woolley lecture at Rockford on Monday night. Those present report a big crowd and an able lecture.

—Send or bring a dollar to the GAZETTE office for a year's subscription and commence with Jany. 1 number and you will get "Historical Facts" by Hon. B. F. Christleib, worth more than the $1.00.

—Several musical agents attended the meeting of the city council on Monday evening for the purpose of selling a piano to the village but the "fathers" concluded the funds were rather low to indulge in such a luxury at present.

—On Sunday a couple of weeks ago while fooling with a revolver, Otto Marr, Jr. shot himself through the thigh making an ugly wound. Dr. Shrader extracted the bullet and he is in a fair way to recover. We understand his mother hid his revolver after the accident. Such young boys should not carry this kind of weapons. Strange that most accidents of this kind occur on the Sabbath day.

—On Monday afternoon, Master Fay Parslow very quietly left the paternal roof and foregoing the pleasures of an afternoon at school, footed it to Rockford station where he surprised his brother, Henry. In the evening the two returned home to Delano, Master Fay receiving a frostbite on the ear, by which he can remember for some time that it was the coldest day of the season when he left home and returned again.

—In mentioning the school board meeting as it did a couple of weeks ago the Eagle was following its well beaten path. When things do not go to suit her she s-c-r-e-e-c-h-e-s out in this manner. It is downright mean to say the least for her to say that there was no quorum present when four members out of six were there. Of course people familiar with the situation are well aware that the Eagle considered one of the absent members of more consequence than all the rest of the board. She has for years tried in this manner to intimidate, and has been successful too, not only the school board but the village council. Anything she can not "boss" she evidently has no use for, and the school board appears to be getting a little too independent for her. Of course the usual method of smoothing it up will be resorted to and the double headed bird will have only to lay it all on to the other fellow. Was this the first offense of the kind we might think it strange but it is but her way to misrepresent people and things to gain her ends. Judging from a former occasion, as "history repeats itself", we look for a resignation from the school board.

—The next M. E. sociable will be held at Squire Billings' on Friday, 29th inst.

—Weather Bureau Wittman says the lowest temperature reached this year was 37½ degs., Monday night.

—Fred Japs is calling on people at Waverly and in that vicinity for a couple of weeks for the purpose of taking their orders for shrubbery and garden seeds. Give him your order.

—John Edward, the five months old son of Edward and Ida Stewart died last night after a brief illness. They have the sympathy of the entire community in this their second bereavment.

—The fire companies turned out about eleven o'clock this morning at a call, and inundated the residence of Mr. Muckenheirn, and Albert Johnson who was on the roof. Dell Young took a tumble almost into the cellar and lots of fun was had but the house still stands.

—Hon. B. F. Christlieb, of Long Lake and John McGary, of Independence, were GAZETTE visitors on Wednesday. Mr. C. was interviewing some of our old settlers concerning the early settlements of the Crow River Valley. He came into the big woods himself in 1859, consequently will be able to speak from his own knowledge of many of the incidents of pioneer life in the "Historical Facts" appearing each week in the GAZETTE. Being a surveyor he run the lines and settled the disputes of many of the early settlers, as well as laid out their roads and being thrown among them he talked over with them, and heard them relate incidents occuring previous to his becoming one of them. Probably no better historian of the country about which he writes could be found today. The "Historical Facts" began with January 1, this year and are in conjunction with those to follow, destined to become a reliable reference from the date of their publication. Persons desiring a complete narrative of the settlements and pioneers, their ups and downs; one that can be depended on, not one where those only who pay for the privilege have their names recorded, should subscribe for the GAZETTE and either file away the papers or cut out and paste in a scrap book, each week's sketch until they are the posessors of a history to which they can turn and refresh their memories from time to time and which will prove a boon to themselves and their posterity.

Personals.

Miss Elizabeth Priess, of St. Paul, is visiting her sister, Mrs. Hitz, this week.

Charles Cunningham, from Kansas City arrived home on Saturday morning for a visit.

John L., son of Louis Mayer of Minneapolis, has taken the position of night operator at the depot here.

County Cullings.

Among possible Democratic candidates for Congress from the new sixth district, to which Wright county now belongs, we notice mention has been made or H. C. Bull, H. C. Stivers, C. A. Moody and Henry Keller. There seems to be abundance of material from which to select a good one.

The Buffalo Journal publishes a list of Wright county teachers with their post office addresses. On looking it over we noticed the omission of the names of two, we dont know how many more have been left off the list, nor just why the name of Miss M. E. Bennett, of Waverly, nor Mrs. Anna Lindsley, of Delano are not given. Perhaps the superintendent doesn't care to have people write to them.

Circulars have been sent out by the North Star Domocratic Club Association to prominent Democrats throughout the State, claiming loyalty to the Democratic party and to Democratic principles. The circular is quite a fair statement of the situation. The object of the club is claimed to be the thorough organization of the party, an object which it is very essential to obtain, in order to triumph next November.

Tariff Pictures.

"The 'carpet tax' liar has been singing small lately. No wonder. Every time he shows his head a fact like this hits it. An Eighth avenue firm sells Axminster and Moquette carpets at 79 cents a yard. That is less than the duty, which is 60 cents a square yard and 40 per cent. ad valorem. Carpet is generally a little more than a yard wide; but letting it go at that, the duty on these goods is at least 91 cents a yard. And yet the Millses and other free trade cranks are getting ready to shout in the year 1892 the tariff is a tax.' "—New York Press.

Of course no one believes that these carpets were ever made in the places their names would indicate.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

DEMOCRATIC CALL.

Tuesday, June 21, Officially Named for the Convention.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—The Democratic national convention today issued the following call:

The national Democratic committee, at a meeting held this day, in the city of Washington, D. C., has appointed Tuesday, the 21st day of June, 1892, as the time and chosen the city of Chicago as the place for holding the national Democratic convention. Each state is entitled to a representation therein equal to double the number of repsesentation to which it is entitled in the next electoral college, and each territory and the District of Columbia shall have two delegates. All Democratic conservatives, citizens of the United States, irrespective of past political associations and differences, who can unite with us in the effort for pure, economical and constitutional government are cordially invited to join us in sending delegates to the convention.

CALVIN S. BRICE, Chairman.
SIMON P. SHEERIN Secretary.

ON January 26th, the Manhattan club of New York gave their new Senator, David B. Hill, a grand reception on his return home from Washington. David seems to be sailing high in the Empire State.

GROVER CLEVELAND was recently invited by the Mississippians, to visit their Capital while in their State. He He receives honors wherever he goes. and is the decided choice of the west for President in 1892.

Now that the time and place of holding the Democratic as well as the Republican National Convention has been fixed upon, it remains but for the respective parties to select their candidate and nominate him when the great Presidential campaign of 1892 will have been opened in earnest.

CONSIDERABLE speculation is being indulged in concerning the location of the National Democratic Convention at Chicago. Some claim it was a decided victory for the anti-Cleveland men while others, with we think, a better right, claim it about as impartial a place, at present, as conld be found.

PRESIDENT HARRISON has sent to Congress another Message, on January 28, concerning Chilian affairs in which he says:

"The response of Mr. Periera, to our note of the 21st, withdraws, with acceptable expressions of regret, the offensive note of Mr. Matta of the 13th ult., and also the request for the recall of Mr. Egan. The tacatment of the incident of the assault upon the sailors of the Baltimore is so consiliatory and friendly that I am of the opinion there is a good prospect that the difference growing out of that serious affair can now be adjusted upon terms satisfactory to this government, by the usual methods and without special powers from Congress.

S. M. Owen's Ideas.

A GOVERNMENT RAILROAL.—Senator Stanford would have the Government build a trans-continental railroad and says that such a road could carry a ton of freight from the Atlantic to the Pacific for $5.00, which is probably true. But why build another road? The government has already practically built three transcontinental roads, and two of them are indebted to the government for nearly as much as it would now require to build them. Instead of giving those roads a hundred years more time, at two per cent, to liquidate their debts to the government, let the government foreclose on one, at least, and thus at practically no expense begin the experiment of railway ownership and control. It is not more miles of railroads we need, but greater honesty in the administration of those we have.—The Alliance Standard.

The governments army of officials is already quite large enough without adding to it several regiments more. If the railroad are to be manned with Government employes then must follow telegraphers, expressmen and so on "ad infinitum," until the employes of the government are in such a majority as to perpetuate one party in everlasting existance.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22, 1892.

The National Democratic Committee has, after mature deliberation and consideration of all the circumstances involved, decided upon the place for holding the Democratic National convention. The decision does not meet with the approval of everybody, nor was it expected that it would, but the members of the committee have by virtue of the authority temporarily confided to them, done what they considered best for the interests of the party, and that fact is so fully recognized by the members of the disappointed delegations that all of them will return home fully determined to forget their personal disappointment in working for the election of the ticket which shall be nominated by that convention. Let all good Democrats go and do likewise, and the result will be victory.

The meeting of the Executive committee of the National Association of Democratic Clubs held at the National headquarters here this week, was presided over by Representative Wilson, of West Virginia. All the members were present in person or by proxy, and they were all enthusiastic over the condition of the association, which will this year make itself an important factor in the Presidential campaign. According to the report of the Secretary there are now between five and six thousand clubs in the association, representing every State and Territory. The committee decided that the full committee, which will decide upon the time and place for holding the National convention of the association to ratify the nominations for President and Vice-President, should meet at the same time and place as the nominating convention. The club convention will be held sometime in August, and several cities are already in the field for the honor of entertaining it.

Senator Gorman's re-election has from the first been a certainty, but that did not prevent his colleagues from overwhelming him with congratulations as soon as it was an accomplished fact.

The drummers have secured a favorable report on their bill amending the Interstate Commerce law so as to allow the railroads to give them better terms than they get now from the Commerce committee of the House.

Those Republicans who were so certain that Mr. Mills would take no part in the present session, are not saying much just now, as that gentleman has returned much improved in health and with his usual vim has jumped right into the hard work. He has declined the chairmanship of the Commerce committee.

Hon. Edward J Phelps, of Vermont, who was our minister to England during the Cleveland administration, will probably be one of the representatives of this country in the arbitration of the Behring Sea matter. Mr. Phelps was a guest at a state dinner at the White House this week.

Thoughtless people are predicting a short session of Congress, but men like Mr. Holman, who know that protracted controversies are certain to arise between the House and Senate over the appropriation bills, do not look for an adjournment earlier than August and will not be surprised if it does not take place earlier than October.

Speaker Crisp has not yet ventured out of doors, but he assisted his Democratic colleagues of the committee on Rules in the preparation of the code of rules which are to govern this house during this Congress. The new rules, now completed, are largely made up from those under which the House of the fiftieth Congress worked, with several important additions to prevent filibustering beyond a reasonable time, and instead of giving the Speaker authority to cut off debate, as the Reed rules did, they give the majority of the House that authority.

Whether the rumored row between Secretary Blaine and Mr. Harrison, or some bit of shrewdness on the part of the Chilian minister is the cause of the delay in sending the Chilian correspondence and the Presidential message to Congress, is a question about which there is a wide difference of opinion; but it is certain that something has "hung up" the matter. The sensational newspaper men are making the most of the situation. Stories of promises made by German and English ministers, and of abrupt demands by the same parties are being worked up into every form that can be suggested by lively imaginations. When the correspondence goes to Congress, if there is no change in the situation, it is probable that it will be considered by a Democratic caucus, in order that the party may act upon it with unanimity.

It is nonsense to charge, as the Republicans are doing, that the Democrats of the House defeated the bill for the reform of the system of printing and distributing public documents because of the retrenchment it made in expenditures. It was defeated because it gave the Public Printer too much authority and because it created a new bureau of office holders. The retrenchment will be made without the objectionable features of this bill.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

Previous to 1855, St. Anthony now the East division of Minneapolis, was the only town at the falls of St. Anthony. The term "Minneapolis" had not yet been evolved by that old settler, and scholarly gentleman, Hon. Charles Hoag, from the Sioux and Greek languages and the name was not known till 1855, when it was applied to the new town just laid out on the west side of the Mississippi at the falls of St. Anthony. Up to that time St. Anthony or "St. Anthony's Falls" were only terms by which the place was known to immigrants into the Big Woods, which explains the use of the term, "St. Anthony" or "St. Anthony Falls" in the earlier part of these sketches.

In 1854, O. E. Garrison inaugurated the proceedings by which the Townsite of Wayzata was laid out under the land laws of the United States, to which he gave practical effect by starting business enterprises, opening a general store and making arrangements for the immediate erection of a steam saw mill, in prospect of which Wayzata began to have a practical existence in advance of a legalized existence, and the spring of 1855 found additional residents and enterprises, namely: William Dudley, hotel and blacksmithing; Abel W. Day, hotel; James N. Dudley, Salmon R. Churchill and others as settlers.

On the 21st of May, 1855, the townplat of Wayzata was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Hennepin county by which the proprietors were enabled to convey lands to settlers. Wayzata about that time received additional prominence by being made a post town —— Chapman being appointed postmaster and Abel W. Day ass't postmaster; subsequently the latter became postmaster.

About this time the people of Wayzata were thrown into consternation, by the arrival of a young man who was very ill, being in the agonies of Asiatic cholera which he had contracted on a Mississippi steamer, who after unavailing efforts on the part of the settlers for his relief, expired. This was the first death in the region lying between Wayzata and the Forks of Crow river. The aged mother of O. E. Garrison who was quite feeble, died a few days later from fright occasioned by this circumstance.

O. E. Garrison having in the mean time began the erection of his steam saw mill which afforded employment to many settlers after making the improvements on their claims necessary to hold them; by which the sawmill was pushed to completion during that season and became a valuable institution to the surrounding country.

ORONO-1855

Leaving Wayzata to its prospective thrift, the first settlements of the adjacent country will now be noted, beginning with that included in the present limits of the Town of Orono which comes next in order both in the matter of time and geographical position. In April 1855, Theodore A. Norris and William C. Fleming of Adrian Michigan settled on the southerly shore of Long Lake on the road opened by Job Moffat. A few days later David A. Lydiard, Miles Bayer and Daniel Thompson arrived at the settlement of Norris and Fleming, and after viewing the country surrounding Long Lake attempted to cross the lake on thawing ice, at the risk of their lives, and after slumping several times succeeded in gaining the north shore, where they found desirable land and immediately laid claim to portions with lake frontage by commencing improvements thereon.

David A. Lydiard and Miles Bayer were Nova Scotians and were the pioneers of the Nova Scotia settlement about Long Lake and also the first to break the forest on the north shore of that lake. They were soon followed by Richard Danforth, Wallace Hatter, John Carver and James Dunbrack (a Nova Scotian) who settled on the west shore of the same lake and by John Matteson who settled back of the lake. Lewis Harrington and Lorenzo Coleman were successive squatters on land now owned by Jacob Hursh and others, about that time.

In April 1855 James and Francis Maxwell returned from a visit to their former homes in Illinois, and were accompanied by their father, John Maxwell, and their brothers Robert and George Maxwell, their sister Mrs. Emily Turnham and her husband Edwin Turnham and family and also by a neighbor John Shaefer and while enroute on the Mississippi Steamboat, Galena, they became acquainted with three Pennsylvanians: Isaac A. Christlieb, Robert H. and Joseph L. Knettle; the latter on learning the character of the country about lake Minnetonka of the Maxwell Brothers concluded to seek locations there. The Maxwells and relatives found their way to the cabins erected by James and Francis Maxwell the previous year, on Maxwells Bay, while the three Pensylvanians halted at the cabin of Stephen Bean, which was, as previously noted, in the same vicinity, where they were entertained, and by the expiration of the first week of the following May the entire party found locations: Isaac A. Christlieb Robert H. Knettle, John Shaefer in the same section with their host Bean, Joseph L. Knettle further north and Edwin Turnham and George Maxwell located between Bean's and Maxwell's Bays. John Maxwell, the father, was a native of Scotland and in early life enlisted as a soldier in the British army and served under the Duke of Wellington, taking an active part in the battles of Badajoz, Salamanca and Waterloo and was one of the veterans, who on the defeat of Napoleon, were sent against the Americans in the war of 1812, serving under Packenham at the battle of New Orleans where he escaped the bullets of General Jackson's riflemen which experience instead of deterring him drew his admiration and on the expiration of his term of service in the British Army became an American citizen and a resident amongst American riflemen or pioneers, in Virginia, Ohio and Illinois, pursuing the avocations of peace, and finally ending an eventful life in the tranquility of the forests of Lake Minnetonka some time after his arrival in Minnesota, at a ripe old age.

The sick list is very large, some of the most severe cases reported are Mr. and Mrs. John Menth, Mrs. A. Zamm, Mrs. VanderWeyer, Mrs. Uhl, Mrs. Scholtes and others. Mrs. John Menth and Mrs. Henry VanderWeyer had several visits from Drs. Gibbs and Wettmore.

J. C. Hitz, from Delano, looked after the insurance safety of this village on the 21st and judging by the smile he wore while leaving town, the result of his visit must have been satisfactory. Charles is well liked here and the popular opinion of him seems to be, Justice to all and malice to none.

Mrs. Gordon, of Silver Creek, an old lady, relict of the late Sylvester Gordon, of that place died last Saturday night. Her death was, very sudden she went to bed as usual and in a few minutes was found dead. Her funeral service was held on Monday p. m. Elds. Ringer and Higgins officiating. A remarkable coincidence, is that only a few weeks ago, her husband was found dead in bed, he being supposed to be in usual health upon retiring. They were both aged people, he being over 80 years.

It is reported that Dr. Stafford contemplates holding a series of revival meetings at Kimball in the near future, taking with him as assistants some of his zealous young pastors such as Elds. Davis, Higgins and Dart. It is said that Kimball contains more piety to the square inch than any other place in the state but that they are divided on doctrinal points that they are likened to a house divided against itself. However we hope the doctor will be able to harmonize their differences so they will be able to give good pastor a decent support.

We came near forgetting to mention the fact that the editor of the Post spent the last Sabbath in Minneapolis visiting in his son's family there, and that he returned very much refreshed and in good spirits. EMPEROR MAXIMILIAN, of Germany, ordered a suit of clothes from his tailor four hundred years ago, and the bill has just been put into court. Monarchy has its advantages, after all.

IT is no wonder there are so few good people left. A scientist has calculated that sixty-two die every minute of the day and night the year round, and every one of them is virtuous, according to the tombstone.

FRESH proof that there is nothing new under the sun. It is now discovered that Thucydides had the grip, which raged violently in Greece five hundred years before Christ. The classic philosopher described it as "a bothersome malady." No doubt the present grip is the same old plague.

AN orange and lemon trust has just been formed at Riverside, Cal. The stockholders are principally the older residents, who own the finest groves in the finest of all the orange producing sections. They intend to make a specialty of fine packing and thus establish a first-class reputation for their brands.

THE first consignment of camel skins for commercial purposes ever brought to this country reached New York the other day on the last voyage of the steamer Normandie. CURRENTS of water serve to a vast extent the purpose of distributing seeds. Walnut, butternut and pecan trees are found close to streams, where they drop their nuts into the passing flood, to be carried far away and start other groves perhaps hundrees of miles distant. Tree seeds of many sorts are carried by oceanic currents.

NO MAN or woman was ever created too good to do honest work, and those who shirk their duty are only sowing seeds of trouble. There is work to do everwhere, in the office, on the farm, in the store, on the ranch, at the bank counter and in all departments of life. The true philosophy and genuine happiness of life is only found in doing honest work.

TENNYSON was first moved to write verses, according to some special information which the Boston Globe has recently obtained, when 16 years of age, and upon a Sunday while staying home from church. The attempt was suggested by someone else, as a means of occupying his spare time. The task was undertaken, so the story goes, and with such success that the youth was encouraged to try further.

A CITIZEN of Salt Lake City sued the city for $5,000 damages for injuries sustained in falling on a defective sidewalk in the city. The citizen was pretty drunk at the time he fell, and he admitted the fact to the court. The city set up a defense of contributory negligence. The plaintiff's lawyer laid down the very plain and plausible proposition that "a drunken man is as much entitled to a good sidewalk as is a sober man and is much more in need of it." The jury was still wrestling with the logic of the plea at last reports.

THE results of figuring on the coal supply of the United States were recently presented to the academy of natural sciences at Philadelphia by Gen. Isaac J. Wistar. He thinks that at the present rate of consumption we shall have no coal at all in 112 years from now. This is a much smaller estimate of time than made by others, but it may be close to the truth, being arrived at from personal observation of the great coal fields of the United States, British Columbia and Nova Scotia. The general says all the coal fields in North America contain less than 150,000 square miles of actual coal.

LATER.

The Chilian Affair.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—It transpired late this afternoon that Minister Egan had communicated to the secretary of state the reply of the Chilian government to the note of Secretary Blaine. This message confirms in every particular the statements made that Chili had agreed to withdraw the offensive note sent by Senor Matta; to withdraw its request for the recall of Minister Egan, and to submit the Baltimore affair to the arbitration of some neutral nation or to submit the matter to the decision of the United States supreme court. Mr. Egan states the propositions at greater length than the press dispatch, but the exact additions cannot now be ascertained.

There is reason to believe, however, that the Chilian government not only offers to withdraw the offensive note, but in addition offers to apologize for it. It also agrees to the positions taken by the United States in regard to the right of asylum and the safe conduct of refugees. Mr. Egan's dispatch was submitted to the cabinet at its meeting to-day. The entire question was discussed and it is understood that a difference of opinion was developed as to the propriety of accepting the offer without modification so far as it related to the submission of the question of Chili's liability for the attack on the sailors of the Baltimore to arbitration of a neutral nation or to the decision of the supreme court. Without reaching a decision the meeting adjourned. The president will doubtless communicate Mr. Egan's dispatch to congress, but will probably not do so for several days unless it is called for by the house or senate.

Two barges with about sixty laborers, broke loose from their moorings in New York Harbor the 26th, and drifted out to sea.

JOHN I. RIGGEN, of Philadelphia, Pa., has filed a claim asking indemnity from the Chilian government for the killing of his brother, who was a sailor on the U. S. ship Baltimore.

THE most disastrous fire that Columbus, O., ever experienced occurred the 26th. The Metropolitan Opera house and the building of the H. C. Godman's Leather Co., was consumed. Loss $500,000.

THE Minnesota state fair will be held Sept. 5th to 10th.

THE first goods for the Columbian exposition arrived in Chicago from Japan the 26th.

CHILI BACKS DOWN.

Her Reply to the Ultimatum of President Harrison—She Will Withdraw the Matta Note and Her Demand for Egan's Recall, but Wants the Baltimore Dispute Settled by Arbitration.

SANTIAGO, Jan. 26.—The Chilian government has sent a reply to the ultimatum of the United States. The reply is in effect as follows:

Chili agrees to withdraw the offensive note sent by Senor Matta to all the Chilian ministers abroad and acknowledges that its issuance was due to an error of judgment.

Chili also withdraws its request for the withdrawal of United States Minister Egan.

In addition to this the Chilian government in its answer proposes that the affair of the attack on the Baltimore's sailors in Valparaiso be submitted to the arbitration of some neutral nation.

If this proposition is not acceptable to the United States government the Chilian government suggests that the matter be submitted to the decision of the supreme court of the United States.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The reading of the president's message on the Chilian affair and the correspondence accompanying it occupied fifty-nine minutes in each branch of congress Monday and was referred to the foreign affairs committee of each body. The committees are as follows:

Senate—Sherman, chairman; Frye, Dolph, Davis, Hiscock, Morgan, Butler, Kenna and Gray.

House—J. H. Blount, chairman: J. B. McCreary, C. E. Hooker, L. E. Chapman, A. P. Fitch, J. F. Andrews, B. T. Cable, Isadore Raynor, T. J. Geary, R. R. Hitt, A. C. Harmer, James O'Donnell, John Sanford.

In all probability a prompt report will be had from both committees, and if precedent in such cases be followed an effort will be made to make both reports the same, so that there may be no parliamentary quibble on a question involving the national dignity. The chances are that both committees will report some resolution upholding the course pursued by the administration.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—Secretary Tracy has received a dispatch from Commander Evans, of the United States cruiser Yorktown, announcing the arrival of that vessel at Callao, Peru. This is the port to which the Yorktown was ordered to convey the Baimacedist refugees taken aboard the vessel at Valparaiso. The secretary said he could not make public the text of the dispatch, as it is in cipher.

MURDERED BY A WOMAN.

Crime of a Society Belle—Miss Alice Mitchell, of Memphis, Cuts the Throat of Miss Freda Ward—Both Young Women Familiar Figures in High Society.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Jan. 26.—A cold-blooded murder was committed Monday afternoon on the custom house walk. Without a word of warning Miss Alice Mitchell rushed up behind Miss Fredereka Ward, threw he left arm around her, and with the other hand drew a razor and cut her throat from ear to ear, severing the jugular vein and windpipe. With a second stroke she laid open her victim's cheek and then left her and turned on her sister, Miss Josephine Ward, making an ugly gash in her throat. She then turned, walked to her buggy and drove to her home, where she was arrested and taken to jail. The reason she gives is that Fredereka had refused to visit or recognize her on the grounds that she flirted. A rumor is current that Miss Mitchell was enraged because Miss Ward had won her sweetheart away from her. Both are daughters of old and wealthy families, who move in the highest society. The Wards now live in Golddust Park, and the young women were on their way to the landing to take a boat home. At the inquest the jury returned a verdict charging Miss Mitchell with the killing and that it was premeditated.

MARRIED A CHINAMAN.

Ada Norton and Wealthy Pang Yun, of Indianapolis, Wedded in Chicago.

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—Pang Yun, a wealthy Chinaman of Indianapolis, and Ada Norton, also of Indianapolis and a daughter of wealthy parents, were married in this city Monday afternoon. The elite of Chicago's Chinese society was treated to a genuine sensation and carried the festivities far into the night. Pang Yun has the distinction of being the richest Chinaman between Chicago and San Francisco. Ada Norton is a mere school girl, being but 19 years old, and but recently graduated from the high school. She is a handsome brunette with snapping black eyes and a mass of raven hair. Pang Yun is a native of Pekin, educated in this country and embraces the customs of the land of his adoption. The cue is gone and in its place the short-cropped hair is combed down in the latest style. In appearance he would be taken for an American. The couple returned to Indianapolis at 8 p m. The couple's courtship was not a smooth one, Miss Ada's parents objecting most strenuously to the union. The simplest way out of it was by an elopement, and the couple took the train from Indianapolis Saturday night last and arrived in Chicago Sunday.

TRIED TO KILL HIM.

Mayor Hobbs, of St. Joseph, Mich., Shot at by a Would-Be Assassin.

ST. JOSEPH, Mich., Jan. 26.—The city council has taken active steps to discover the attempted murderer of Mayor Hobbs, of Benton Harbor, Saturday night, and has offered a reward of $500 for his apprehension. Citizens will make it twice that amount. The attempted assassination was a most cowardly crime. The shot barely missed Mayor Hobbs' head. It was fired through a plate-glass window in his house into a room where five persons were practicing choir music. Before the startled company could recover from the shock the assassin had made good his escape

ABANDONED.

The Directors of a Michigan Railway Decide to Run No Trains for the Present.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Jan. 26.—No trains have run on the Ann Arbor & Ypsilanti railway for three days owing to the injunction issued by the circuit court Friday. The directors held a meeting and decided to abandon the road for the present. If the present trouble is not settled up the road will lie still until spring and then lay out a new route from the point in dispute, entering the city from another direction. The stopping of the trains is felt greatly by merchants, as much custom came to the city by that line.

Bricklayers Choose Officers.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan. 25.—The National Bricklayers' union on Monday elected officers as follows: President, John Heartz, Denver, Col.; vice president, Nicholas Dugan, Indianapolis; secretary, Thomas Odea, Cohoes, N. Y.; treasurer, Patrick Murray, Albany, N. Y. The cities which are candidates for next year's convention are Baltimore, Newark, Grand Rapids, Omaha and Buffalo.

Paying Depositors.

ELLENDALE, N. D., Jan. 26.—The assignee of the lately defunct Farmers' and Merchants' state bank made his first accounting to the depositors of the same Monday, when each received 25 per cent. together with 7 per cent. interest since the date of the failure. The general impression is that the depositors will in time be paid in full.

A SCORE PERISHED.

Destruction by Fire of the National Surgical Institute at Indianapolis—At Least Twenty of the Helpless Inmates Burned to Death—As Many More Injured.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan. 23.—In the surgical institute which burned Thursday night at midnight, a score of helpless, crippled children, inmates of the institution, lost their lives, and as many more persons were injured, some of them badly; most of them slightly. Two hundred and forty-six patients and thirty nurses, sleeping in the two four-story buildings at the corner of Illinois and Georgia streets, in which the institute is located, were in imminent danger of their lives.

Their rescue, the fight with the flames, and the final discovery of the charred remains of the poor, dead children wrapped in each others' withered arms, make a story rarely paralleled in the annals of modern cities. It was almost on the stroke of 12 when Janitor Gill gave the alarm, instantly followed by the second and third. The telephone had conveyed to the chief the news that the building of all others where fire was dreaded was in flames. This meant no ordinary danger. It proved to be a holocaust.

Some were killed by jumping, but the others were suffocated or burned to death. The list of identified dead is:

Kate Strong, Salem, Ore.; Mrs. Lazarus, of Chicago, jumped from the second story of the rear building; William Ramstack, Milwaukee; Miss Kate Burns, Newport, Minn.; Frank Burns, Newport, Minn; Minnie Arnold, Lancaster, Mo.; Irma Payne, Dexter, Minn.; Stella Spees, Macomb, O.; Minnie McDonald, Negaunee, O.; George Ellis, California, Ky.; Mrs. Earb and daughter, Shelby, O.; Frank Breeden, Memphis, Tenn.; Mortie Deckko, died at 36 North Mississippi street; Frederick Dockendorf, Stillwater, Minn.; Hannah Brook, Taylorsville, Ill.; C. H. Gorman, McDonald, Mich.; Arthur Bayless.

Injured: Minnie Lazurus, aged 7, leg broken; Mrs. H. H. Edena and son, both severely injured; Mrs. Thomas, 184 Massachusetts avenue, burned about the face and body, in terrible agony; Fannie Breeden, Memphis, Tenn., burned in a dozen places; Mrs. J. R. Guild, Medaryville, Ind., internally injured by a fall from the ladder, probably fatal; Mary Stearns, Warren, Ia., terribly burned about the feet while running into the burning hallway; Clara Morris, hurt in back; Grant Van Hoosen, Athens, N. Y., hand and ear burned; Clarence Mead, Athens, N. Y., leg slightly hurt; William H. Albach, Dunkirk, N. Y., slightly burned; Leora Knowles, Independence, Ind., back hurt by jumping out of third-story window; M. W. Wydner, Troy, O., internally injured by falling out of a window while trying to escape; William Mansfield, Otsego, N. Y., foot hurt while jumping; Mrs. John S. Stokes, Danville, Ill., sprained ankle; Nellie Mason, of Walworth county, Wis., jumped out of third-story window and will die from her injuries; Mrs. C. J. Simpson and little girl, carried out by firemen, seriously burned; R. Connor, fell from the second to the first floor, serious if not fatal internal injuries; W. M. Widener, Miami county, O., terribly crushed and fatally injured; Roy Harris, New Orleans, not seriously hurt.

Five bodies were taken out Friday morning. Kregelo & Whitsett took four of them to their morgue and one was taken in charge by Powers & Blackwell. They were roasted alive, the skin having peeled off from the bodies. In a few instances their faces were burned off.

The fire started just before midnight, and the first alarm was quickly followed by second, third and fourth calls. From all that can be ascertained it is probable that the fire originated in the room where the printing matter, circulars, etc., were kept. This is on the ground floor in the rear of the main building.

As soon as the hallways had been sufficiently cleared of the smoke to permit an investigation some of the most horrible scenes were developed. In one room on the third floor four victims were found dead kneeling in the attitude of prayer. The windows in the room were up, but their occupants had apparently made no efforts to escape nor appeal for rescue. The stifling smoke had overtaken them, and seeing no avenue of escape had become resigned to their fate, and as a last hope muttered a prayer to heaven begging the interference of Providence in their behalf. In a room on the second floor a man was found in bed dead. The smoke had found its way into the room slowly and he was gradually overcome, expiring without a struggle. Further along the hallway a young man was found sitting beside an open window, his dead body leaning forward. There seemed to be no good reason for this loss of life, as all those who appeared at the windows were quickly saved. Although the occupants were nearly all more or less seriously crippled many of them became so frantic that they lost all self-control and almost invited death by their action. They would rush to a window, cast their eyes below, and realizing that a leap was almost certain death retreated at once into the room and faced the result desperately.

Early Friday morning ghouls began their work among the ruins and no small amount of jewelry and valuables was pilfered by the thieves. Detectives arrested a man who gave his name as Russell. They found him rumaging among the debris and in his pockets were money and other valuables which it was thought he had stolen from the effects of the patients.

The citizens are strong in their condemnation of the gross negligence of the management of the institute in the matter of exit, the building having only a narrow hall and staircases and being a death-trap. The owners will undoubtedly be censured in the investigation.

There was a total insurance of $51,500 on the surgical institute buildings, furniture and surgical supplies. The exact loss cannot be estimated but it will aggregate at least $40,000.

AWFUL CRIME OF A MOTHER.

Crazed by Trouble She Kills Her Two Children and Herself.

LONDON, Jan. 23.—A dreadful tragedy occurred at Nottingham. Mrs. Margaret Castings, a milliner, has been overwhelmed with domestic troubles and became demented. This morning she took her two children, one after the other, in her arms and kissed them tenderly, and then with a hammer beat in their skulls, killing them both. The wretched mother, spattered with the brains of her children, afterward cut her own throat with a razor and expired by their side.

Six of the employes were burned to death and three were seriously injured

DEATH OF JUSTICE BRADLEY.

Close of the Life of the Venerable Jurist at Washington—Sketch of His Career.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23.—Joseph P. Bradley, associate justice of the supreme court of the United States, died on Friday at his residence, of general debility. Justice Bradley was in the 79th year of his age. Justice Bradley had been ill for several months from general breakdown. On Monday he grew worse and has since failed rapidly, although apparently not suffering any pain.

JUSTICE BRADLEY.

[Joseph P. Bradley was born at Berne, N. Y., March 14, 1813. His grandfather was one of the heroes of 1812. The eldest of eleven children, Joseph was early inured to work, secured largely his own schooling, and graduated with honors at Rutgers and won reputation as a writer. He was admitted to the bar in 1840, and in 1870 he was appointed to the supreme bench, being assigned to the Fifth circuit, in the south, where he rendered many important decisions. Since then he has been attached to the Third circuit. As a jurist he won distinction in cases involving maritime law, constitutional construction and patent cases. At the outbreak of the civil war he took an active part with voice and pen in defending the union cause. He inclined but little toward politics. In early life he was a whig, later a republican. He accepted a congressional nomination in 1862, but in a district where the opposing party could not be deposed. In 1868 he headed the state electoral ticket for Grant. He cast the deciding vote in the electoral commission of 1877, the report of which settled the Hayes-Tilden presidential contest.]

SCHAEFER WINS.

Slosson Defeated at Balk-Line Billiards—Each Has Now Won Seventeen Out of Thirty-Four Games.

NEW YORK, Jan. 23.—A large crowd was in attendance at the Lenox lyceum Friday night to witness the match at balk-line billiards between Jacob Schaefer and George Slosson. The stakes were $1,000 aside and the battle was for the balk-line championship. Pincus Levy, of Philadelphia, was the referee, and Budd Schofield was the marker. The game began at 8:20. Schaefer winning the lead. It was not ended until after midnight, lasting three hours and forty-four minutes. Thirty-four innings were played. Schaefer won by 208 points, the score standing: Schaefer, 800; Slosson, 592. Schaefer's average, 23 18-34; Slosson's average, 17 51-33. Schaefer's best runs, 155, 101; Slossson's best runs, 119, 65.

Including Friday night's match Schaefer and Slosson have met thirty-four times at all kinds of billiards. According to the record Schaefer has won seventeen times and Slosson seventeen, though Schaefer claims that the games won by Slosson at St. Louis December 5, 1885, and at St. Paul October 10, 1886, were exhibitions only. The men first met in October, 1873, at Indianapolis. Here is the summary of their games:

A CLOSE CALL.

Terrible Experience of a Diver at the Waterworks Crib in Chicago.

CHICAGO, Jan. 23.—A diver named Scully was employed at the 2-mile crib to go below the surface of the lake and remove the ice from the gates through which water is pumped into the tunnel. The suction from the pumps was so great as to draw him into the port-hole. A portion of his suit caught, and prevented him from being drawn bodily into the tunnel. His comrades above could not release him and word of his situation was telephoned ashore. Immediately every engine at the various pumping works was stopped thus causing the suction to cease, when Scully was pulled to the surface after having remained in his perilous position for an hour and a half. He was unconscious, but was soon restored. He felt no bad effect of his struggle with death save some bruises caused by the ice crushing him against the top of the port-hole.

C., has appointed Tuesday, the 21st day of June, 1892, as the time, and chosen the city of Chicago as the place for holding the national democratic convention. BOTH ARE DEAD.

The Suicide of a Young Lady in Virginia Followed by That of Her Lover.

ROANOKE, Jan. 23.—A shocking tragedy occurred Thursday in Franklin county. Miss Delia Nicholas was engaged to be married to John T. Pinkhard, the son of a well-to-do farmer, but the young lady's parents objected to the match. Yesterday morning the young lady procured a rope and hung herself in the woods near her home. As soon as young Pinkhard was informed of the death of his sweetheart, he at once took a large dose of arsenic, from the effects of which he soon died.

WORK OF A MOB.

It Takes Hapler Out of Jail at Nevada, Mo., and Hangs Him at Lamar.

NEVADA, Mo., Jan. 23.—Hapler, who was in jail here charged with an assault on a Barton county woman, was taken out of the custody of the sheriff Friday night by a mob from Lamar and carried back. The sheriff gathered a posse, composed largely of militia, and started in pursuit, but was too late. When he arrived at Lamar he found Hapler dead. He had been hanged in the courthouse yard as soon as the mob escorting him reached the place of his crime.

GOING IN THE SPRING.

The cultivators of what the New York Sun calls the stunted grain-fields of the East will hear with mixed feelings the reports of the yield that has been gathered from the farms of the Northwest. Far-seeing men, a long time ago, predicted that which we now see happening in the country northwest of Lake Superior. The yield this year has been good in many places in the western part of the continent, but amongst the largest returns reported are some from Manitoba and the Saskatchewan. Over their own signatures, a number of farmers have answered questions put to them, by a circular from the local Government, giving precise details as to the acreage under crop, the quantity of seed used, and the amount of grain harvested. The replies of some show over 50 bushels per acre, but this is exceptional. There are many over 40 and a great number have averaged 36 of wheat, with heavy yields of oats and barley. The truth appears to be, and the New York Sun explained the reason, that the soil of Manitoba and the adjacent provinces is exceptionally rich and specially adapted for mixed farming by reason of its adaptability to wheat, and from the rich grasses that grow so luxuriantly throughout the country. And the authorities of these provinces have acted wisely in offering their land free to those who choose to settle on it; for the measures they have adopted for assisting new-comers, and in making no distinction between Canadians and other people. The railways, too, by giving purchasers of land a free ticket westward, have shown an appreciation of the situation. The spring will see many availing themselves of the chance offered them.

TIGHTS AND STOCKINGS.

The Newest Wrinkles in Fastenings and Garters—How a Girl Shops.

Every one knows that garters have gone out, and girdles have come in; but did any stop to trace the analogy between the decadence of the one and the popularity of the other? It is the wearing of tights, of course, that brings the garter into desuetude; that is, that reduces the number of garters worn by one-half. If you see a swagger girl with a gold ribbon one inch in width clasped around her waist, you may wager your bank account that she has its mate clasped around her leg, just below the knee. What for? Oh, just for the quaint conceit of the thing.

It is amusing to watch the pretty girls shopping for tights. With the perversity of things mundane, the hose counters are presided over by men, and it is very embarrassing to have them think you are a skirt dancer or a ballet favorite. And so the pretty girl gets the tights on an order from the country, or for a friend, or her mother or grandmother even. Then she hustles home and puts them on her own slender extremities, throws away her garters and harness of elastic straps, and in half an hour realizes that she has never really lived before. The lines of anxiety smooth out of her fair brow, the shadows of care soften from her eyes. She knows her stockings won't come down, and battle, murder, and sudden death lose their terrors for her.

One of the most remarkable things about a woman is the way she manages from little girlhood up to keep one corner of her mind clear and devoted to her stockings in the midst of most distressing grief and anxiety. As a child, no matter how much she wants to beat her brother in the race, she has to stop if her stockings come down. As a woman, she may, in the stress of her woe, let her hairpins fall out, she may forget to eat or sleep, but she never relaxes the vigilance over her stockings. The amount of nerve force consumed in a lifetime of this constant, strict surveillance is enormous. Now that the tyranny of the garter is ended it is little wonder that our girls are growing taller and that our women are stepping up bravely into the world's high places and winning laurels in fame's great temple.—N. Y. Sun.

President Harrison's Message on the Chilian Imbroglio.

Minister Egan's Acts Upheld—The Ultimatum—Reparation Insisted Upon.

TEXT OF THE MESSAGE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.—The following is President Harrison's message on the Chilian situation sent to congress yesterday:

TO THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES: In my annual message, delivered to congress at the beginning of the present session, after a brief statement of the facts then in the possession of this government touching the assault in the streets of Valparaiso, Chili, upon the sailors of the United States steamship Baltimore on the evening of the 16th of October last, I said: "This government is now awaiting the result of an investigation which has been conducted by the criminal court at Valparaiso. It is reported unofficially that the investigation is about completed, and it is expected that the result will soon be communicated to this government, together with some adequate and satisfactory response to the note by which the attention of Chili was called to this incident. If these just expectations should be disappointed, or further needless delay intervene, I will, by a special message, bring this matter again to the attention of congress for such action as may be necessary.

In my opinion the time has now come when I should lay before the congress and the country the correspondence between this government and the government of Chili, from the time of the breaking out of the revolution against Balmaceda, together with all other facts in the possession of the executive department relating to this matter. The diplomatic correspondence is herewith transmitted, together with some correspondence between the naval officers for the time in command in Chilian waters and the secretary of the navy and also the evidence taken at the Mare Island navy yard since the arrival of the Baltimore at San Francisco. I do not deem it necessary in this communication to attempt any full analysis of the correspondence or of the evidence. A brief restatement of the international questions involved and of the reasons why the responses of the Chilian government are unsatisfactory is all that I deem necessary.

It may be well, at the outset, to say that, whatever may have been said in this country or in Chili in criticism of Mr. Egan, our minister at Santiago, the true history of this exciting period in Chilian affairs, from the outbreak of the revolution until this time, discloses no act on the part of Mr. Egan unworthy of his position or that could justly be the occasion of serious animadversion or criticism. He has, I think, on the whole, borne himself, in very trying circumstances, with dignity, discretion and courage, and has conducted the correspondence with ability, courtesy and fairness.

It is worth while also at the beginning to say that the right of Mr. Egan to give shelter in the legation to certain adherents of the Balmaceda government who applied to him for asylum has not been denied by the Chilian authorities, nor has any demand been made for the surrender of these refugees. That there was urgent need of asylum is shown by Mr. Egan's note of August 24, 1891, describing the disorders that prevailed in Santiago, and by the evidence of Capt. Schley as to the pillage and violence that prevailed at Valparaiso. The correspondence discloses, however, that the request of Mr. Egan for a safe conduct from the country, in behalf of these refugees, was denied. The precedents cited by him in the correspondence, particularly the case of the revolution in Peru in 1865, did not leave the Chilian government in a position to deny the right of asylum to political refugees and seemed very clearly to support Mr. Egan's contention that a safe conduct to neutral territory was a necessary and acknowledged incident of the asylum. These refugees have very recently, without formal safe conduct, but by the acquiescence of the Chilian authorities, been placed on board the Yorktown and are now being conveyed to Callao, Peru. This incident might be considered wholly closed, but for the disrespect manifested toward this government by the close and offensive police surveillance of the legation premises which was maintained during most of the period of the stay of the refugees therein. After the date of my annual message and up to the time of the transfer of the refugees to the Yorktown the legation premises seem to have been surrounded by police in uniform and police agents or detectives in citizens' dress who offensively scrutinized persons entering or leaving the legation and, on one or more occasions, arrested members of the minister's family. Commander Evans, who by my direction recently visited Mr. Egan at Santiago, in his telegram to the navy department, described the legation as "a veritable prison," and states that the police agents or detectives were, after his arrival, withdrawn during his stay. It appears further, from the note of Mr. Egan of November 29, 1891, that on one occasion at least these police agents, whom he declares to be known to him, invaded the legation premises, pounding upon its windows and using insulting and threatening language towards persons therein. This breach of the right of a minister to freedom from police espionage and restraint seems to have been so flagrant that the Argentine minister, who was dean of the diplomatic corps, having observed it, felt called upon to protest against it to the Chilian minister of foreign affairs. The Chilian authorities have, as will be observed from the correspondence, charged the refugees and the inmates of the legation with insulting the police; but it seems to me incredible that men whose lives were in jeopardy and whose safety could only be secured by retirement and quietness should have sought to provoke a collision which could only end in their destruction, or to aggravate their condition by intensifying a popular feeling that, at one time, so threatened the legation as to require Mr. Egan to appeal to the minister of foreign affairs.

But the most serious incident disclosed by the correspondence is that of the attack upon the sailors of the Baltimore in the streets of Valparaiso on the 16th of October last. In my annual message, speaking upon the information then in my possession, I said: "So far as I have yet been able to learn, no other explanation of this bloody work has been suggested than that it had its origin in hostility to these men as sailors of the United States, wearing the uniform of their government, and not in any individual act of personal animosity."

We have now received from the Chilian government an abstract of the conclusions of the fiscal general upon the testimony taken by the judge of crimes in an investigation which was made to extend over nearly three months. I very much regret to be compelled to say that this report does not enable me to modify the conclusion announced in my annual message. I am still of the opinion that our sailors were assaulted, beaten, stabbed and killed, not for anything they or any one of them had done, but for what the government of the United States had done, or was charged with having done, by its civil officers and naval commanders. If this be the true aspect of the case the injury was to the government of the United States, not to those poor sailors who were assaulted in a manner so brutal and so cowardly.

Before attempting to give an outline of the facts upon which this conclusion rests, I think it right to say a word or two upon the legal aspect of the ca[se]. The Baltimore was in the harbor of Valpa[raiso] by virtue of that general invitation whi[ch] [na]tions are held to extend to the [ves]sels of other powers with w[hom] they have friendly relations. This [is] to be deemed to [in]clude, must be held ordinarily to [in]clude the privilege of such communication with the shore as is reasonable, necessary and proper for the comfort and convenience of the officers and men of such vessels. Capt. Schley testifies that when his vessel returned to Valparaiso on September 14, the city officers, as is customary, extended the hospitalities of the city to his officers and crew.

It is not claimed that every personal collision or injury in which a sailor or officer of such naval vessel visiting the shore may be involved raises an international question, but I am clearly of the opinion that where such sailors and officers are assaulted by a resident populace, animated by hostility to the government whose uniforms these sailors and officers wear and in resentment of acts done by their government, not by them, this nation must take notice of the event as one involving an infraction of its rights and dignity; not in a secondary way, as where a citizen is injured and presents his claim through his own government, and in a primary way precisely as if its minister or consul or the flag itself had been the object of the same character of assault. The officers and sailors of the Baltimore were in the harbor of Valparaiso under the orders of their government, not by their own choice. They were upon the shore by the implied invitation of the government of Chili and with the approval of their commanding officer; and it does not distinguish their case from that of a consul that his stay is more permanent or that he holds the express invitation of the local government to justify his long resistance. Nor does it affect the question that the injury was the act of a mob. If there had been no participation by the police or military in this cruel work and no neglect on their part to extend protection, the case would still be one, in my opinion, when its extent and character are considered, involving international rights.

The incidents of the affair are, briefly, as follows:

On the 16th of October last Capt. Schley, commanding the United States steamship Baltimore, gave shore leave to 117 petty officers and sailors of his ship. These men left the ship about 1:30 p. m. No incident of violence occurred; none of our men were arrested; no complaint was lodged against them, nor did any collision or outbreak occur until about 6 o'clock p. m. Capt. Schley states that he was himself on shore and about the streets of the city until 5:30 p. m.; that he met very many of his men who were upon leave; that they were sober and were conducting themselves with propriety, saluting Chilian and other officers as they met them. Other officers of the ship and Capt. Jenkins, of the merchant ship Keweenaw, corroborate Capt. Schley as to the general sobriety and good behavior of our men. The Sisters of Charity at the hospital to which our wounded men were taken, when inquired of, stated that they were sober when received. If the situation had been otherwise, we must believe that the Chilian police authorities would have made arrests. About 6 p. m., the assault began, and it is remarkable that the investigation by the judge of crimes, though so protracted, does not enable him to give any more satisfactory account of its origin than is found in the statement that it began between drunken sailors. Repeatedly in the correspondence it is asserted that it was impossible to learn the precise cause of the riot. The minister of foreign affairs, Matta, in his telegram to Mr. Montt, under date December 31, states that the quarrel began between two sailors in a tavern and was continued in the street, persons who were passing joining in it.

The testimony of Talbot, an apprentice who was with Riggin, is that the outbreak in which they were involved began by a Chilian sailor spitting in the face of R. Talbot, which was resented by a knock down. It appears that Riggin and Talbot were at the time unaccompanied by any others of their shipmates. These two men were immediately beset by a crowd of Chilian citizens and sailors, through which they broke their way to a street car and entered it for safety. They were pursued, driven from the car, and Riggin was so seriously beaten that he fell in the street apparently dead. There is nothing in the report of the Chilian investigation made to us that seriously impeaches this testimony. It appears from Chilian sources that almost instantly, with a suddenness that strongly implies meditation and preparation, a mob, stated by the police authorities at one time to number 2,000, and at another time 1,000, was engaged in the assault upon our sailors, who are represented as resisting "with stones, clubs and bright arms." The report of the intendente of October 30 states that the fight began at 6 p. m. in three streets which are named, that information was received at the intendencia at 6:15, and that the police arrived on the scene at 6:30, a full half hour after the assault began. At that time he says that a mob of 2,000 men had collected, and that for several squares there was the appearance of a "real battlefield."

The scene at this point is very graphically set before us by the Chilian testimony. The American sailors, who, after so long an examination, have not been found guilty of any breach of the peace, so far as the Chilian authorities are able to discover, unarmed and defenseless, are fleeing for their lives, pursued by overwhelming numbers, and fighting only to aid their own escape from death or to succor some mate whose life is in greater peril. Eighteen of them are brutally stabbed and beaten, while one Chilian seems, from the report, to have suffered some injury; but how serious, or with what character of weapon, or whether by a missile thrown by our men or by some of his fellow rioters, is unascertained.

The pretense that our men were fighting "with stones, clubs, and bright arms," is, in view of these facts, incredible. It is further refuted by the fact that our prisoners, when searched, were absolutely without arms, only seven penknives being found in the possession of the men arrested, while there were received by our men more than thirty stab wounds, every one of which was inflicted in the back, and almost every contused wound was in the back or back of the head. The evidence of the ship's officer of the day is that even the jackknives of the men were taken from them before leaving the ship.

As to the brutal nature of the treatment received by our men, the following extract from the account given of the affair by the La Patria newspaper, of Valparaiso, of October 17, cannot be regarded as too friendly: "The Yankees, as soon as their pursuers gave chase, went by way of the Calle del Arsenal toward the city car station. In the presence of an ordinary number of citizens, among whom were some sailors, the North Americans took seats in the street car to escape from the stones which the Chilians threw at them. It was believed for an instant that the North Americans had saved themselves from popular fury, but such was not the case. Scarcely had the car begun to move, when a crowd gathered around and stopped its progress. Under these circumstances and without any cessation of the howling and throwing of stones at the North Americans, the conductor entered the car and, seeing the risk of the situation to the vehicle, ordered them to get out. At the instant the sailors left the car, in the midst of a hail of stones, the said conductor received a stone blow on the head. One of the Yankee sailors managed to escape in the direction of the Plaza wheelright, but the other was felled to the ground by a stone. Managing to raise himself from the ground where he lay he staggered in an opposition direction from the station. In front of the house of Sig. Mazzini he was again wounded, falling then senseless and breathless."

No amount of evasion or subterfuge is able to cloud our clear vision of this brutal work. It should be noticed, in this connection, that the American sailors arrested, for an extradition, were, during the four days following the arrest, everyone discharged, no charge of any breach of the peace or other criminal conduct having been sustained against a single one of them. The judge of crimes, Foster, in a note to the Intendente, under date of October 22—before the dispatch from this government of the following day, which aroused the authorities of Chili to a better sense of the gravity of the affair—says: "Having presided temporarily over this court in regard to the seamen of the United States cruiser Baltimore, who have been tried on account of the deplorable conduct which took place," etc. The noticeable point here is that our sailors had been tried before the 22nd of October, and that the trial resulted in their acquittal and return to their vessel. It is quite remarkable and quite characteristic of the management of this affair by the Chilian police authorities that we should now be advised that Seaman Davidson, of the Baltimore, has been included in the indictment, his offense being, so far as I have been able to ascertain, that he attempted to defend a ship-mate against an assailant who was striking at him with a knife. The perfect vindication of our men is furnished by this report; one only is found to have been guilty of criminal fault, and that for an act clearly justifiable.

As to the part taken by the police in the affair the case made by Chili is also far from satisfactory. The point where Riggin was killed is only three minutes' walk from the police station and not more than twice that distance from the Intendencia; and yet, according to their official report, a full half hour elapsed after the assault began before the police were upon the ground. It has been stated that all but two of our men have said that the police did their duty. The evidence taken at Mare Island shows that if such a statement was procured from our men it was accomplished by requiring them to sign a writing in a language they did not understand and by the representation that it was a mere declaration that they had taken no part in the disturbance. Lieut. McCrea, who acted as interpreter, says in his evidence that when our sailors were examined before the court the subject of the conduct of the police was so carefully avoided that he reported the fact to Capt. Schley on his return to the vessel. The evidence of the existence of animosity towards our sailors in the minds of sailors of the Chilian navy and of the populace of Valparaiso are so abundant and various as to leave no doubt in the mind of anyone who will examine the paper submitted. It manifested itself in threatening and insulting gestures toward our men as they passed the Chilian man of war in their boats and in the derisive and abusive epithets with which they greeted every appearance of an American sailor on the evening of the riot. Capt. Schley reports that boats from the Chilian warships several times went out of their course to cross the bows of his boats, compelling them to back water. He complained of the discourtesy, and it was corrected. That this feeling was shared by men of higher rank is shown by an incident related by Surgeon Stitt of the Baltimore. After the battle of Placilla he, with other medical officers of the war vessels in the harbor, was giving voluntary assistance to the wounded in the hospitals. The son of a Chilian army officer of high rank was under his care, and when the father discovered it, he flew into a passion and said he would rather have his son die than have Americans touch him, and at once had him removed from the ward. This feeling is not well concealed in the dispatches of the foreign office and had quite open expression in the disrespectful treatment of the American legation. The Chilian boatmen in the bay refused, even for large offers of money, to return our sailors, who crowded the Mole, to their ship when they were endeavoring to escape from the city on the night of the assault. The market boats of the Baltimore were threatened, and even quite recently the gig of Commander Evans of the Yorktown was stoned while waiting for him at the Mole. The evidence of our sailors clearly shows that the attack was expected by the Chilian people, that threats had been made against our men, and in one case somewhat early in the afternoon, the keeper of one house, into which some of our men had gone, closed his establishment in anticipation of the attack, which he advised them would be made upon them when darkness came on. In a report of Capt. Schley to the navy department, he says: "In the only interview that I had with Judge Foster, who is investigating the case relative to the disturbances, before he was aware of the entire gravity of the matter, he informed me that the assault upon my men was the outcome of hatred for our people, among the lower classes, because they thought we had sympathized with the Chilian government on account of the Itata matter. Several of our men sought security from the mob by such complete or partial changes in their dress as would conceal the fact of their being seamen of the Baltimore and found it then possible to walk the streets without molestation. These incidents conclusively establish that the attack was upon the uniform—the nationality—and not upon the men. The origin of this feeling is probably found in the refusal of this government to give recognition to the congressional party before it had established itself in the seizure of the Itata for an alleged violation of the neutrality law in the cable incident, and in the charge that Admiral Brown conveyed information to Valparaiso of the landing at Quintero. It is not my purpose to enter here any defense of the action of this government in these matters.

It is enough for the present purpose to say that if there was any breach of international comity or duty on our part it should have been made the subject of official complaint through diplomatic channels or of reprisals for which a full responsibility was assumed. We cannot consent that these incidents and these perversions of the truths shall be used to excite a murderous attack upon our unoffending sailors, and the government of Chili go acquitted of responsibility. In fact, the conduct of this government during the war in Chili pursued those lines of international duty which we had so strongly insisted upon on the part of other nations when this country was in the throes of active conflict. We continued the established diplomatic relations with the government in power until it was overthrown and promptly and cordially recognized the new government when it was established. The good offices of this government were offered to bring about a peaceful adjustment, and the interposition of Mr. Egan to mitigate severities and to shelter adherents of the congressional party were effective and frequent. The charge against Admiral Brown is too base to gain credence with anyone who knows his high personal and professional character.

Referring to the evidence of our sailors, I think it is shown that there were several distinct assaults and so nearly simultaneous as to show that they did not spread from one point. A press summary of the report of the fiscal shows that the evidence of the Chilian officials and others was in conflict as to the place of origin, several places being named by different witnesses as to the locality where the first outbreak occurred. This, if correctly reported, shows that there were several distinct outbreaks and so nearly at the same time as to cause this confusion. The La Patria, in the same issue from which I have already quoted, after describing the killing of Riggin and the fight which from that point extended to the mole, says: "At the same time in other streets of the port the Yankee sailors fought fiercely with the people of the town, who believed to see in them incarnate enemies of the Chilian navy."

The testimony of Capt. Jenkins, of the American merchant ship Keweena, which had gone to Valparaiso for repairs, and who was a witness of some part of the assault upon the crew of the Baltimore, is strongly corroborative of the testimony of our own sailors when he says that he saw Chilian sentries drive back a seaman seeking shelter from a mob that was pursuing him. The officers and men of Capt. Jenkins' ship furnish the most conclusive testimony as to the indignities which were practiced towards Americans in Valparaiso. When American sailors, even of merchant ships, can only secure their safety by denying their nationality, it must be time to readjust our relations with a government that permits such demonstrations. As to the participation of the police, the evidence of our sailors shows that our men were struck and beaten by police officers before and after arrest and that one, at least, was dragged with a lasso about his neck by a mounted policeman. That the death of Riggin was the result of a rifle shot fired by a policeman or soldier in duty is shown directly by the testimony of Johnson, in whose arms he was at the time, and by the evidence of Charles Langen, an American sailor not then a member of the Baltimore's crew who stood close by and saw the transaction. The Chilian authorities do not pretend to fix the responsibility of this shot on any particular person, but avow their inability to ascertain who fired it, further than that it was fired in a crowd. The character of the wound, as described by one of the surgeons of the Baltimore, clearly supports his opinion that it was made by a rifle ball, the orifice of exit being as much as an inch or an inch and a quarter in width. When shot, the poor fellow was unconscious and in the arms of a comrade, who was endeavoring to carry him to a neighboring drug store for treatment. The story of the police that in coming up the street they passed these men and left them behind them is inconsistent with their own statement as to the direction of their approach and with their duty to protect them and is clearly disproved. In fact Riggin was not behind, but in front of the advancing force, and was not standing in the crowd, but was unconscious and supported in the arms of Johnson when he was shot.

The communications of the Chilian government in relation to this cruel and disastrous attack upon our men, as will appear from the correspondence, have not in any degree taken the form of a mighty and satisfactory expression of regret, much less of apology.

The event was of so serious a character that, if the injuries suffered by our men had been wholly the result of an accident in a Chilian port, the incident was grave enough to have called for some public expression of sympathy and regret from the local authorities. It is not enough to say that the affair was lamentable, for humanity would require that expression, even if the beating and killing of our men had been justifiable. It is not enough to say that the incident is regretted, coupled with the statement that the affair was not of an unusual character in ports where the foreign sailors are accustomed to meet. It is not for a generous and sincere government to seek for words of small or equivocal meaning in which to convey to a friendly power an apology for an offense so atrocious as this. In the case of the assault by a mob in New Orleans upon the Spanish consulate in 1851, Mr. Webster wrote to the Spanish minister, Mr. Calderon, that the acts complained of were "a disgraceful and flagrant breach of duty and propriety," and that "his government deplores them as deeply as Minister Calderon and his government could possibly do," that "these acts have caused the president great pain, and he thinks a proper acknowledgement is due to her majesty's government."

He invited the Spanish consul to return to his post, guaranteeing protection, and offered to salute the Spanish flag if the consul should come in a Spanish vessel. Such a treatment by the government of Chili of this assault would have been more creditable to the Chilian authorities and much less can hardly be satisfactory to a government that values its dignity and honor. In our note of October 23 last, which appears in the correspondence after receiving the report of the board of officers appointed by Capt. Schley to investigate the affair, the Chilian government was advised of the aspect which it then assumed and called upon for any facts in its possession that might tend to modify the unfavorable impressions which our report had created. It is very clear from the correspondence that, before the receipt of this note, the examination was regarded by the police authorities as practically closed. It was however, reopened and protracted through a period of nearly three months. We might justly have complained of this unreasonable delay but in view of the fact that the government of Chili was still provisional and having a disposition to be forbearing and hopeful of a friendly termination, I have awaited the report which has but recently been made. On the 21st inst. I caused to be communicated to the government of Chili by the American minister at Santiago the conclusion of the government after full examination, and every suggestion affecting this matter, and to these conclusions I adhere they were stated as follows: First—That the assault is not relieved of the aspect which the early information of the event gave to it, viz.: that of an attack upon the uniform of the United States navy having its origin and motive in a feeling of hostility to this government and not in any act of sailors or of any of them.

Second.—That the public authorities of Valparaiso flagrantly failed in their duty to protect our men and that some of the police and some of the Chilian soldiers and sailors were themselves guilty of unprovoked assault upon our sailors before and after arrest. He (the president) thinks the preponderance of the evidence and the inherent probabilities lead to the conclusion that Riggin was killed by the police or soldiers.

Third.—That he (the president) is therefore compelled to bring the case back to the position taken by this government, by the note of Mr. Wharton of October 23 last, and to ask for a suitable apology and for some adequate reparation for the injury done to this government."

In the same note the attention of the Chilian government was called to the offensive character of a note addressed by Mr. Matta, its minister of foreign affairs, to Mr. Montt, its minister at this country on the 11th ult. This dispatch was not officially communicated to this government; but as Mr. Montt was directed so translate it and give it to the press of this country, it seemed to me that it could not pass without official notice.

It was not only undiplomatic, but grossly insulting to our naval officers, and to the executive department, as it directly imputed untruth and insincerity to the reports of naval officers and to the official communications made by the executive department to congress. It will be observed that I have notified the Chilian government that unless this note is at once withdrawn and an apology is public as the offense made I will terminate diplomatic relations. The request for the recall of Mr. Egan upon the ground that he was not persona grata was unaccompanied by any suggestion that could properly be used in support of it, and I infer that the request is based upon official acts of Mr. Egan which have received the approval of this government. But however that may be I could not consent to consider such a question until it had first been settled whether our correspondence with Chili could be conducted upon a basis of mutual respect. In submitting these papers to congress for that grave and patriotic consideration which the questions involved demand, I desire to say that I am of the opinion that the demands made of Chili by this government should be adhered to and enforced. If the dignity as well as the prestige and influence of the United States are not to be wholly sacrificed we should protect those who in foreign parts display the flag or wear the colors of this government against insult, brutality and death, inflicted in resentment of the acts of their government and not for any fault of their own. It has been desired in every way to cultivate friendly and intimate relations with all the governments of this hemisphere." We do not covet their territory; we desire their peace and prosperity We look for no advantage in our relations with them except to increase exchange of commerce upon a basis of mutual benefit. We regret every civil contest that disturbs their peace and paralyzes their development, and are always ready to give our good offices for the restoration of peace. It must, however, be understood that this government, while exercising its utmost forbearance towards weaker powers, will extend its strong and adequate protection to its citizens, to its officers and to its humblest sailor when made the victims of wantonness and cruelty in resentment not of their personal misconduct but of the official acts of their government. Upon information received that Patrick Shields, an Irishman and probably a British subject, but at the time a fireman of the American steamer Keweenaw, in the harbor of Valparaiso for repairs, had been subjected to personal injuries in that city largely by the police, I directed the attorney general to cause the evidence of the officers and crew of that vessel to be taken upon its arrival in San Francisco; and that testimony is also herewith transmitted. The brutality and even savagery of the treatment of the seamen by the Chilian police would be incredible if the evidence of Shields was not supported by other direct testimony and by the distressing condition of the man himself when he was finally able to reach his vessel. The captain of the vessel says: "He came back a wreck; black from his neck to his hips from beating; deaf, and stupid, and is still in a kind of a paralyzed condition, and has never been able to do duty since."

A claim for reparation has been made in behalf of this man, for, while he was not a citizen of the United States, the doctrine held by us, as expressed in the consular regulations is "the principles which are maintained by this government in regard to the protection, as distinguished from the relief, of seamen are well settled. It is held that the circumstance that the vessel is American, is evidence that the seamen on board are such, and in every regularly documented merchant vessel the crew will find their protection in the flag that covers them."

I have as yet received no reply to our note of the 21st instant, but in my opinion I ought not to delay longer to bring these matters to the attention of congress for such action as may be deemed appropriate.

BEHEADED.

A German Woman Executed for Poisoning Her Husband—The Emperor Decides to Discard This Barbarous Method of Capital Punishment.

BERLIN, Jan. 25.—A woman named Badmewaski was beheaded Saturday by the Berlin executioner for having killed her husband by administering poison to him. She will, however, in all probability, be the last criminal dispatched in this manner, as the emperor is turning his attention to methods of capital punishment. His majesty has decided against the present barbarous system. The emperor hesitates between death by hanging and electrocution. It is understood that he prefers the former method. The use of the guillotine, as practiced in France, he rejects entirely.

LONG DROUGHT BROKEN.

The First Rain for Four Years Falls in Durango.

DURANGO, Mexico, Jan. 25.—A steady rain has been falling here for two days. This is the first rain that has fallen here in four years. The drought in this part of the state is broken, but there will be no decrease in the suffering among the people for several months, as crops will not be harvested until August. So far 250,000 bushels of corn have been purchased by the state government and distributed among the half-famished wards of this city. It is estimated that 500,000 bushels of the grain will be purchased to carry the starving people through the next six months. All of this corn will be purchased in the United States.

DYNAMOS DESTROYED.

Plant of the Boston Electric Light Company Burned—Loss $200,000.

BOSTON, Jan. 25.—The Ferdinand street branch of the Boston Electric Light Company has been destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at $200,000. The fire broke out about 3:30 and was under control in an hour. The property destroyed consisted of twenty-four dynamos, valued at $5,000 each, 150 horse power engines, one 100-horse power engine and one 300-horse power engine. Ten minutes after the fire was discovered the main floor fell with a crash and carried with it the valuable machinery. It is feared that one life was lost.

BROOKLYN, Jan. 25.—Ex-Congressman William Robinson, better known as "Richelieu" Robinson, died at his residence in this city of old age and heart failure. He had been in failing health for some time.

[He was born near Cookstown, Ireland, May 6, 1814; immigrated to this country in 1836; graduated at Yale college and was a student at the Yale law school; was a writer for the New York Tribune over the signature of "Richelieu" and for other journals. He was elected a representative from New York in the Fortieth congress as a democrat, serving from March 4, 1867, to March 3, 1869.]

NATURE'S MEDICINES.

The Advantages of Exercise and Temperance.

The human stomach is surely a marvelous contrivance, or it could never assimilate the incongruous mess that is put into it at a luxurious, modern dinner. Soup, fish, flesh, oil, vinegar, wines, pastry, ices, confectionery, fruits and numberless minor ingredients of conflicting chemical qualities are among the materials "thrown in." Truly, man is "fearfully and wonderfully made." No other creature could exist on such diet. It would kill a gorilla in a month. It does kill, though more slowly, thousands of that high and mighty variety of the human race commonly called gentlemen. Universal temperance in eating and drinking would quadruple the general health and add years to the average life of the race.

Exercise is as essential to health as temperance. In fact, intemperate eaters and drinkers sometimes stave off disease for many years by using their muscles manfully. As a rule, however, your gormandizers and guzzlers are indolent. There is a story in the "Arabian Nights" of a physician who cured a sultan of plethora by introducing certain medicaments into a mallet, with which the patient hammered every day until he fell into a profuse perspiration, when the virtues of the panacea in the mallet passed through the fibers of the wood into his pores. This is merely an allegorical way of enforcing the great lesson that bodily exercise is beneficial to health—that exercise is excellent physic. Everybody who knows anything about the mechanism of the human frame sees, of course, that it was made to work, and we may add that if it does not fulfil the conditions of its structure it is sure to corrode and drop to pieces prematurely.

Exercise and temperance are nature's medicines, and they have this great advantage over all others, that while they promote health and long life they secure for all who put trust in them the means of independence.—N. Y. Ledger.

DELANO DIARY.

—Grover Buckley has been grunting with the Grippe this week.

—Read the Presidents Message to Congress concerning the Chilian difficulty, on the third page of this paper.

—Thomas Worthy has up posters for an auction to be held on Friday: February 5th at, his farm. He evidently intends leaving this country for good.

—Mose Williams footed it up from Armstrong on Monday and took the evening train west for Smith Lake where he is stopping at present.

—Louis Bock and wife celebrated their silver wedding last Friday. Their son Ed was married on the same day and a big time was had. Numerous visitors and presents were received.

—Rev. Davies does not propose to sit by and allow Watertown to get ahead of him and now claims that his horse has beaten the Watertown squires horse over the same road, by 5 minutes.

—Rev. J. R. Davies is sufficiently recovered to enable him to officiate at his appointments on Sunday, provided the weather is not too severe. La Grippe was his keeper for the past week.

—Jolly Tom Rader came down from Dassel this week after his well machinery but owing to the few warm days sleighing was so nearly gone that he conaluded to give Jim Hill the job of transporting the heavy load, while he drove back empty.

—George M. Wright and Mrs. F. L. Halgren, of Montrose, visited Rev. Davies last Friday evening. They brought along, as a token of esteem, something substantial for his larder, he being down with the La Grippe and unable to go out foraging himself.

—Miss Cassie Cramer, sisterin-law of Peter Welker, and an old settler of the town of Franklin, died on Thursday after a short illness. She was born in Utica, New York, and after living in Illinois came to Minnesota in the fifties. The funeral will take place on Saturday, at 11 A M.

—The Delano Cornet Band have out posters for a Father Washington ball to be held at the City Hall on Monday evening, Feby. 22. Proceeds to apply on the purchase of a new "Band Box" in which the boys would like to ride next 4th of July at the head of the largest turnout Delano ever had.

—A new applicant for a place on our exchange list this week, is a spicy seven column folio, published at Willmar, in the interest of the new party and whose name is "The Alliance Standard." Certainly we will exchange. There is nothing like being posted on the questions of the day and the way to be posted is to exchange ideas.

—Len Dedrick went to Buffalo on Thursday to look after the woodchopping he is having done on his farm near that place. We understand Len intends moving onto the place next summer, where, with his small army of boys he will soon fit up a fine residence in which to take solid comfort during his declining years.

—J. C. McDonald has been busily at work for some time building a sideboard for his son-in-law, Dr. Shrader. It is one of the handsomest pieces of furniture in town, being constructed of quartered oak, giving a handsome grain, and trimmed with black walnut. Three French plate mirrors are placed in the top portion. Mc. expects to build a few more but perhaps less expensive ones for some of our citizens.

—Vol. 1, No. 1, of the "Breeder and Farmer" published at Howard Lake reached us this week. This is a neat publication and bids fair to become a useful adjunct to the farmer's library and one from which he may gain many hints, which if followed will aid in making him "healthy, wealthy and wise". Patronize home industry and send your subscriptions to the Breeder and Farmer, Howard Lake.

—This week's installment of "Historical Facts", by Hon. B. F. Christlieb of Long Lake, found in another column of the GAZETTE are of more than usual interest to old settlers, and even new comers, giving, as it does, some of the interesting incidents of the settlement of the country between "St. Anthony's Falls" and Crow River. Being a good surveyor has only the better fitted the Hon. B. F. for writing "Historical Facts".

—Again we would call the attention of the committee on streets of our village council to the necessity of having the road improved under the railroad on Watertown street. Many teams pass under the railroad at this point every day and persons with lively teams run considerable risk every time they do so. Now that the road is icy the vehicle slews around quite easily striking the piling on either side as there is not sufficient room to drive comfortably between unless a person is very careful and there are no cars coming or no one walking on the track overhead. This could be fixed so that farmers and others can drive into town from that direction without being in dread of the trying ordeal of "running the gauntlet" every time they come or go.

—Call at Young's Hotel on next Thursday, Friday and Saturday and pay your Personal Tax.

—On Wednesday one of the school boys had the misfortune to be on the register in the hall at the school house when it gave way, precipitating him at risk of life and limb to the depths below. The aperture left in the floor after the young gentlemans rescue was covered over with boards. We have not heard if the pupil intends commencing a suit for damage or not, had he been so unfortunate as to break a leg perhaps that would have followed.

—The Eagle does not seem to recover from the shock received when the school board passed those "idiotic resolutions regarding excuses." A pretty term to apply to the action of his fellow members of the school board. As for keeping scholars after school, they should be taught punctuality in returning home as well as to school. If the teacher, or the man on the board is entitled to an excuse in the morning the parent is equally entitled to one when the pupil comes home late in the evening.

—The dog lawsuit that was transferedto justice Ferrell from this place was to have taken place on Monday. At the hour set, about forty people with attorneys and all prepared for the settlement of the case met at Montrose and learned that justice Ferrell had changed his residence from Woodland to Marysville, and was no longer a squire so the crowd dispersed and pronounced that the "doggondest dog case yet," unless proceedings are commenced over again it will probably end thusly. People should use due caution to keep their meat away from other peoples dogs, and their dogs away from other peoples meat and then there would be no occasioned for such cases.

Personals.

A. L. Mealy made a flying trip to Howard Lake on Wednesday.

W. H. Frazee and wife of Buffalo visited friends here on Tuesday.

County Cullings.

The Buffalo Journal comes to us this week in a changed form. It is now in trim to become a readable sheet. Just the same size as the GAZETTE.

John Kelly, of Waverly, is out in a letter to the Eagle in which he takes the ground that in choosing county commissioners, politics should be left in the background, and men be selected "who dare do their duty and who are possessed of those indispensible qualifications, honesty and ability." "That a public office is a public trust." That clerks for county officers should bring in an itemized account of services rendered. John is a progressive kind of a fellow and not afraid to speak his mind at all events,

Gottleib F. Geirback formerly a resident of Montrose, and now known as the Minneapolis needle doctor, is again in trouble being charged with causing the death of a patient from erysepelas communicated by means of his appliances.

The new Catholic church at Waverly was dedicated on Sunday last. It is a fine brick structure with a seating capacity of 800, and was crowded, all standing room being occupied. The audience was estimated at 1500. Bishop McGolrick of Duluth preached the sermon and was assisted in the ceremonies by Rev Zawodzki of Delano and another Priest from the seminary near St Paul, Rev McGolrick lectured in the evening, subject, The Cross. Rev. Gulliot is the priest in charge.

We are pleased to notice how staunch a Democrat the Waverly Tribune has got to be. Thats right Tribune have good principles and stick up for them.

In another column will be found an able communication from Woodland where Alliance people live.

The News Papers and Alliance.

The news papers that have been congratulating themselves and the parties under whose respective lashes they are being driven that the Farmers Alliance is dying in its infancy are startled at the large and enthusiastic meeting at Minneapolis on the opening of the New Year. The event of such a Convention reminds us that,

"The present, though clouds o'er her countenance roll,
Has a light in her eye, and hope in her soul."

The Waverly Tribune seems to be very much opposed to the farmer's party. He thinks that a fusion of the Alliance with the Democrat party is out of the question. We agree with him on that point, and we hope that this aspiring young party will keep itself free from either of the old parties and their corruption and prejudice. Let this party follow the precedent set forth by S. M. Owen and aim for principle more than for offices.

The reason Tribune gives for his side is the forty-two planks of what he calls, "clap-trap that may blind farmers" but will not secure offices and spoils which are the ends and aims of the old parties and we might add, the only issue between them. We do not agree with the Alliance in many of its so called planks but we do look forward with hope for the future when we see our class, viz: the class doing useful, necessary labor, organizing to secure in a peaceful manner the rights of its members. Although we are convinced that reform can be brought about only through the instrumentality of a new party, we do not think this party infallible by any means. We can not see how reform, which all, including the Tribune, will agree is needed, will ever come from either of the old parties. Some other means must be tried. Plutocracy, though itself in the minority handling the venial or ignorant masses by bribery or by sending among them hired orators to arouse their prejudices, has identified itself so closely with the old parties that our government is fast becoming a plutocracy, and money must be used to get offices. True, the new parties carry in their ranks many corrupt politicians but they are composed mostly of the thinking industrial classes which are the vitals of the nation. They are as the navigator, to whom we owe so much, for their discoveries, as yet not sure they are sailing in the right direction to find a passage, but they know there is a way and they are going to find it. They will get the ridicule that is always given to new ventures. The newspapers of the large cities which are run in the interest of rings and trusts will misrepresent and ridicule the mossbacks and hayseeds and the village editor will take his little rattle and join the big city drum as our Waverly man in saying it might decieve farmers, &c. We can easily see how much consideration the farmer and his interests get from the newspaper press.

Last fall when the farmers had a picnic at the county fair they were addressed by Dr. Fish and it was the best speech of the day if not of the season and although nearly every paper in the county was represented on the ground not a word was given about the farmers meeting or the name of their speaker mentioned. The Tribune gives some confused ideas of the subtreasury scheme. He seems to have very clouded notions on the money question. We do not believe in this sub-treasury, but it is not such a wild scheme as he makes it. We would like to ask him, how does the national bank make its issues? Does it raise its fund by a tax? How can the farmers and other wealth producing workers rob the government? Does the editor call money wealth or a medium of exchange?

The farmer does not get what he earns and if he works his help more hours than other employers it is because he has to pay more for unskilled labor than any other employer. He has to work late and early to keep up at all.

As to the government ownership of R. R.s. What is meant by the people? What is this government? The editor speaks as if these were two antagonistic interests. As to the people owning and controling the means of transportation and communication we have seen no argument worth refuting to the contrary. Of course they should. We believe that every honest intelligent thinker in the land agrees with this assertion.

If John has nothing that belongs to James it will not injure him to have James get his rights.

A Golden Nugget.

A strange novelty is this golden table corn with its beautiful rich cream color. It is claimed by those who know it that it is very sweet early and tender, and a superior corn. We notice Vick recommends it very highly. The Floral Guide, which comes to us bringing a bouquet of Carnations on the front cover, with a splendid bunch of Brilliant Poppies on the back, gives full description of this new corn, which is only 15 cents a packet. Vick's Floral Guide is worthy a place in the home of anyone who expects to make a garden the coming spring. By all means send ten cents to JAMES VICK'S SONS ROCHESTER N. Y., for the Guide, and you can deduct this amout from your first order. It will pay you well.

INDEPENDENCE.

The warm, mild weather has about spoiled the sleighing.

Nearly everybody is or has been sick. O. Styner, Wm. Fogleman and wife and Mrs. Hardy are all on the sick list and there are many others I might mention.

No preaching at Independence A. C. church last Sunday, J. N. Potter the pastor going to Monticello to attend quarterly meeting.

It is often the case, a person's nationality and surroundings has something to do with moulding their future character and your correspondent being no exception to the rule, no doubt is the reason why I have been voting the Democrat ticket all my life. I was born just south of the Mason and Dixon line, right under the shadow of slavery (but born free) about the time of the reign of King Harrison the first. He and my grandfathey wore war paint together in the war of 1812. Soon after my coming upon the stage of action my father emigrated to southern Indiana and pitched his tent in the land of Graham near unto mount Pisga. There I grew up among the blackberry bushes and broom sage, to a lad of 13 or 14 summers when my father took a severe attack of the Minnesota fever and emigrated here in the spring of 1855 and settled in the town of Independence. We came by the overland route using for motive power, four oxen one span of horses and a muley cow. About the first act of my political life was to vote for George B. McClellan for President and enlist in the army. I went down South at the butt end (not the muzzle) of a Springfield rifle and helped to fill that country with smoke and chicken bones. In July 1865 I got a permit from the war department to return home and to mingle again with my former associates and submit myself to the powers that be, Republican rule. Have never yet went to confession on account of voting the Democratic ticket and must say all the remorse of conscience I ever had for this unrighteous act was sometimes in the dark hours of the night I have felt the briny tear of repentance steal down my tevered cheek and drop into the ocean of oblivion. Now Mr. Editor you know that in this country and even in all other nations, the party in power, the one that rules has superior advantages over all other parties and yet many times the minority is in the right. Now it is a fact that a person can be so wrapped up in his own opinions or imaginations that it is impossible to see the other side of the question. Because the Republicans claim the honor of fighting the war of the Rebellion and knocking off the shackles from four million slaves, setting them free and leaving them among their enemies without corn bread, bacon or protection is no proof they are right and everybody else wrong. Because they have held the power for 30 years is no reason they are right in everything. We read in the Declaration of Independence that all men are created equal, that is they have an inalienable right to vote Republican, Democrat, Alliance, Prohibition, just as may best suit their taste. We understand the Republican party is soon to begin a series of hymnbook meetings that is each member is to be armed with a Republican hymnbook so as to sing their praise and a 32 calibre popgun for coast defense, but I have been writing until my ink, paper and patience is exausted.

Mrs. Frank Styner was buried at Armstrong cemetery last Sunday J. N. Potter, of Rockford, preached the funeral sermon. She died in Minneapolis.

Prohibition club meeting at Town Hall Armstrong next Tuesday evening.

Cut It Down.

The wool schedule is a monster of iniquity; so is the metal schedule; cut 'em down.

The Boston Wool and Cotton Reporter says:

"There is a growing discontent and division of sentiment among the wool interests at the present time which might have been avoided if those who assumed the task of framing the wool schedule in the McKinley bill had possessed sufficient statesmanship to unite upon those reduced and ad valorem duties upon wool which would have coincided with the public demand for a reduced tariff, and would have given to the wool grower that form of tariff most beneficial to himself and least injurious to the manufacturer. To retain and increase the specific duty upon wool at a time when the whole nation was demanding tariff reduction was an act of folly whose end has not yet been reached.

An act of folly, truly, but what is to be said of the metal schedule, when in the South we are making iron as cheap as they can make it in England?

Let some one try a little bill, putting ore and coal on the free list, reducing the duty on pig-iron to $1.50, of steel rails to $3, and other grades in proportion.

Such a bill would do far more for the people than a dozen bills like that of Senator Stanford, or the sub-Treasury bills. Tariff taxes are much too high; cut 'em down.—Courier-Journal.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 8, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 8 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

GOOD-BYE, GOD BLESS YOU.

I like the Anglo-Saxon speech
With its direct revealings;
It takes a hold and seems to reach
Far down into your feelings;
That some folks deem it rude, I know,
And therefore they abuse it:
But I have never found it so,
Before all else I choose it.
I don't object that men should air
The Gallic they have paid for,
With "Au revoir," "Adieu, ma chere,"
For that's what French was made for.
But when a crony takes your hand
At parting to address you,
He drops all foreign lingo, and
He says: "Good-bye, God bless you.

This seems to be a sacred phrase
With reverence impassioned;
A thing come down from righteous days,
Quaintly, but nobly fashioned,
It well becomes an honest face,
A voice that's round and cheerful;
It stays the sturdy in his place,
And soothes the weak and fearful:
Into the portals of the ears
It steals with subtle unction,
And in your heart of hearts appears
To work its gracious function:
And all day long with pleasing song
It lingers to caress you,
I'm sure no human heart goes wrong
That's told, "Good-bye, God bless you!"

DEMOCRATIC CALL.

Tuesday, June 21, Officially Named for the Convention.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—The Democratic national convention today issued the following call:

The national Democratic committee, at a meeting held this day, in the city of Washington, D. C., has appointed Tuesday, the 21st day of June, 1892, as the time and chosen the city of Chicago as the place for holding the national Democratic convention. Each state is entitled to a representation therein equal to double the number of representation to which it is entitled in the next electoral college, and each territory and the District of Columbia shall have two delegates. All Democratic conservatives, citizens of the United States, irrespective of past political associations and differences, who can unite with us in the effort for pure, economical and constitutional government are cordially invited to join us in sending delegates to the convention.

CALVIN S. BRICE, Chairman,
SIMON P. SHEERIN Secretary.

ST. PAUL'S new Post Master is Capt. Henry A. Castle.

GROVER CLEVELAND is still in the field and liable to remain there as long as anybody does. Grover was a good President.

THE Supreme Court decision in the Nebraska governor case has been given as against the Republican, Thayer, and in favor of seating Gov. Boyd who is declared by that honorable body to be a citizen of the U. S.

QUITE a pressure is brought to bear against C. K. Davis having his re-election to the U. S. Senate. If we are to have a Republican at all he is the best one mentioned and believes in free binding twine and knows that sometimes at least "TARIFF IS A TAX."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29, 1892.

Chili's apology has deprived Mr. Harrison of the glory he had anticipated from the conducting of a victorious foreign war, glory which would in his mind, at any rate, have resulted in his certain nomination and in adding largely to his chances of re-election, and it is said, precipitated a domestic war between him and Secretary Blaine that they destroy all of his fondest hopes. The story as it is told here says that Mr. Harrison knew that Mr. Blaine had received verbal assurances from the Chilian minister that the apology would in due time be forthcoming from his government, before he sent the ultimatum, but he feared that the credit of obtaining the apology through the ordinary diplomatic channels would all go to Mr. Blaine, so he sent the ultimatum to Chili and the correspondence and his message to Congress, in order that he might claim the credit for having frightened Chili into apologising. Mr. Blaine resents this stealing of his thunder, and is credited with having said that it would cost Mr. H. the Presidential nomination of his party.

Whether this story be true or not, it is highly creditable to the Democrats in Congress that they accepted the President's message in perfect good faith and were prepared to support the demands of the administration, even to the extent of a declaration of war, when the situation was cleared by Chili's apology. They recognized the demands of this Government as just, and that was enough for them as good citizens and patriotic Americans.

Senator Quay has returned from his "vindication" hunt, but he does not seem proud of what he accomplished. He told one gentleman that he hoped never to hear of another libel suit.

The House Committee on Appropriations has favorably reported the resolutions directing that committee to enquire and report to the House whether the appropriations already made for the World's Fair have been judiciously expended. This resolution will certainly be adopted by the House, and it is not probable that the bill appropriating $5,000,000 for the World's Fair will be acted upon until the committee makes its report.

The action of the sub-committee of the House Judiciary Committee, in deciding to conduct an investigation to ascertain whether articles of impeachment should be presented against Judge Boarman, of Louisiana, for misconduct in office, reopens that case, upon which considerable evidence was taken by the same committee of the last House.

Senator George's resolution for the appointment of a committee of five to inquire into the cause of the existing agricultural depression in the cotton growing States, is being considered by the Committee on Agriculture to which it was referred.

Oklahoma, New Mexico, Arizona and Utah are all knocking at the doors of Congress for admission to the Union and as far as the Democrats are concerned they might all be admitted at this session of Congress, but the Republican Senators believe that the majority of votes in all of them are Democratic, and for that reason they have determined to let none of them in.

Representative Mills made his first speech of the session in defence of the new rules. When he arose he was greeted with applause from the Democrats and from the galleries. He is not bothering his head about the silly reports connecting his name with the leadership of a Democratic revolt in the House.

The Senate adopted a resolution introduced by Senator Morgan, calling on the President for copies of all the correspondence with China concerning the refusal of that country to receive ex-Senator Blair as U. S. Minister. It is believed that if there is any way to get at the true inwardness of this matter a big scandal will be uncovered with which the saintly bloody-shirt New York editor, Col. Elliot F. Shepard, will be found mixed up. It relates to the Chinese concessions to certain Americans to conduct banks, build railroads, etc., which occupied considerable space in American newspapers several years ago.

The Senate unanimously adopted the report of the Election committee confirming Senator Chilcot's right to his seat. The question was raised when he presented his credentials of there being some irregularity in his appointment by the Governor of Texas to serve out the unexpired term of Senator Reagan, who resigned.

Speaker Crisp has been presiding over the House this week, although he is still somewhat weak from his recent illness. The weakness isn't in his head, however.

EDITOR BUFFALO GAZETTE.—I have been silent for some time, not because my love for the GAZETTE or its hundreds of readers has in the least abated, but because of extra demands developing upon me as pastor of Coupeville 1st M. E. church. Times and things are constantly changing, but the great church of which I am happily a member, meets with no great change aside from a more aggressive war upon sin and satin. Just now we are in the midst of a very gracious revival. It started first at Crescent Harbor where Rev. J. L. Parmeter, late of Rockford, Minn., is pastor. The revival broke out upon him and we were called to assist him. God met the promise and opened the windows of Heaven, and warm blessings fell upon the church. Twenty eight fought hard for salvation and 18 found it to the joy of their hearts and joined the church. Bro. Parmeter is a fit in this country, full of holy zeal, he is winning the hearts of his people. We assisted him to the end and when reaching the little city of Coupeville we found the revival had reached them and some were ready for active work. From our heart we felt like saying.

"O Jesus ride on till all be subdued,
Thy mercy make known and sprinkle thy blood,
Display thy salvation and teach the new song,
Convert every nation, and people and tongue."

The Frost king that is holding such complete sway over the states east of us has not yet tried to congeal the warm blood of this beautiful climate. Last week Thursday, myself and wife were at the Hillside Cottage farm, and saw fruit growing as green and fresh as it does in Minnesota in the month of June. Flowers of various kinds are in full bloom and the pasture is as green as in May. Last evening the Seattle Post Intelligencer reached me and I seemed to want to draw my coat up a little closer when I read. St. Paul, Minn. reports the coldest night since four years ago when the thermometer reached 41 below. The mercury registering 26 below at 7 o'clock while at Minnedosa, Man., the minimum last night was 44 below, Duluth 30, St. Pierre, S. D. 30 below, Huron 34, Moorhead 38. Iowa, Texas, Minnesota, Illinois, Arkansas, Missouri, and Kansas are having blinding snow storms, and blockaded railroad while out here in the extreme northwestern part of the U. S. we are enjoying the most delightful weather. Mount Baker stands with her mantle of everlasting snow and reaching her long bony like fingers towards Heaven, seems to challenge the nearer approach of the frost king to the people who dwell behind this, one of Nature's beautiful spots.

It is a grand sight as one casts the eye over the almost trackless waters of these San Wan straits in the direction of Mount Baker or mount Rainier. The natural swell and roll of the salt water as though it was drawing in a long breath preparing for some tremendous effort or trying to frighten away the white and speckled sea gulls that ever and anon strike the upheaving waves with their wings and screeching fly away in search of food. These birds of the sea often follow a ship from one port to another, ever picking up the crumbs that are thrown from the eating saloon.

There has been nothing to jar or molest the even life of the hundreds of people of the state but an occasional growl of some crater or the escaping of the confined gas inside this terrestial shell. Once it would seem as though the rocks and mountains were about to topple over and fall. But mother earth, ever obedient to the master who once said, "Let there be light," smiles back a glad assent to the command. "Be still". Aside from the rumbling sounds there is little to disturb the quiet of every day life. Sickness is almost a stranger to this place. That dreaded monster La Grippe has been felt to some extent but in a mild form.

The young blood of our western cities and towns is somewhat excited over the prospect of a war with Chili, while older and wiser heads nod and say "Chili has awfully big war ships." However, Tacoma, Port Townsend and Seattle are taking steps to fortify the country along their harbor lines which we believe is a very good plan, war or no war. With this whole country open to the sea beyond almost any enemy could take a surprise out of this government.

Some time ago, Capt. Morse, the representative man of the Island received notice by way of a note being stuck up over his potatoes pitted in the field that if the Chinese did not go potatoes would raise. Well, they did go up that same night for some evil minded fellows loaded the pits that were from one to two hundred feet long with giant powder or dynamite and when the captain was locked in the unconsious embrace of slumber, the match was set and potatoes went up with a rush but come down with no better price. Some trouble is feared among all classes unless the celestials emigrate. The farmers are willing to let them go but have rented them lands for five years and cannot turn them away until their time expires which will be in two years. Some are going away now for fear of the whites, that is the class that hang around the corners trying to find a "yob" and praying not to find any. They want the Chinese but the State would grow up to satalle brush and weeds for all them. We often think with prayerful consideration that a few first class funerals would adjust things very well.

My love to all the readers of the GAZETTE.

W. H. WILSON.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

In May 1855, William Fogleman; his wife, Mary; his son, Henry A; and his son-in-law, Vincent Cox of Indiana arrived at Bean's cabin. Henry A. Fogleman and Vincent Cox took claims adjoining that of Isaac A. Chrislieb. About the same time Eleazer Dickey, Samuel Lydiard and Edward F. Walsh, Nova Scotians arrived. Dickey and Lydiard settled near the east end of Long Lake, while Edward F. Walsh settled between Long Lake and Lake Minnetonka in which he was accompanied by his bride, having married Miss Mary Dillman, of Nova Scotia about the same time. About this time —— Hickok, of Ohio, settled on land north of J. L. Knettle's claim. During May and June settlers located between Long Lake and Minnetonka, namely: Shepard Barnes and family, of Maine, Judd Beach, of Michigan; Newton French, Evan Templin and wife, brother and brother-in-law of Allen T. French; William Carman, son of John Carman, who located on land previously marked for him by his father, at present the land of J. J. Hill; Robert Maxwell, previously mentioned; James B. Brown and family, of Indiana, who located on that part of Lake Minnetonka which received its name from their settlement, Brown's Bay. The premises were since owned and occupied by Oliver B. and Joseph C. the sons of James B. Brown. Lewen C. Hunter and Benj. C. Haines, of Ohio, with their families settled on Haines' Bay, Lake Minnetonka, early in 1855.

During the spring of 1855 the following settlers located in the north part of Orono, to wit: Fidel Strubel and James Mooney with their families on the lands still occupied by them: Michael Luby and family on land occupied by his sons Maurice and John; Charles Wolsfield on Wolsfield Lake. In June 1855 William Archibald, of Nova Scotia with his family settled on land adjoining claim of Vincent Cox, being the place where he and his son Herbert reside at present.

The United States surveys of the country north of Lake Minnetonka made about this time rendered it necessary for the squatters to modify the boundaries of their claims, which was satisfactory to some and the opposite to others who in some instances abandoned their first localities to seek new ones. Amongst these were Miles Bayer, who abandoned his location on the north shore of Long Lake and made another adjoining H. A. Fogleman, and avoiding difficulties which beset his associates, D. A. Lydiard, E. Dickey and Richard Danforth, they having taken claims with one fourth mile frontage on Long Lake and one mile in depth, were contested by German settlers who insisted in taking square quarter sections, attempting to claim the rear halves of claims of the former A physical conflict followed in which the habitations of the Germans were literally hewn to pieces, the whole community of settlers about Long Lake having combined to put an end to "claim jumping". Later the Nova Scotia settlers on reconsideration allowed the Germans to hold their claims in peace, which resulted in a good feeling between all the parties concerned.

During the summer of 1855 John A. Coleman and family, of Trumbull, county, Ohio, arrived and settled on the claim of James Dunbrack, the latter relinquishing his claim and seeking another adjoining it on the south: and likewise James H. Clark succeeded John Carver on these two claims the village of Long Lake is now situated; and in like manner A. J. Underwood of Trumbull county, Ohio, succeeded —— Hickok and Allen Grave, of Richmond, Indiana, succeeded Kelsey Hinman and removed there with his family, being the lands now owned and occupied by his son Charles T. Grave and others. Also Alois and Fred'k Fredericks settled in section 30 and —— Flaugher, of Ohio, settled in section 6.

John Carman, of Mahoning county, Ohio, who settled, as before stated, on what is now Spring Park in 1853, was instrumental in having a number of his Ohio acquaintances settle in the Big Woods, amongst whom were the Frenches, Templin, Hunter, Cook, Haines, and others, and likewise Wm. B. Harrington, previously mentioned, was one whom his relatives and acquaintances in Trumbull Co., Ohio followed, namely: his brothers, John S. and Lewis Harrington; his aged parents, John and Rhoda Harrington; —— Hickok; A. J. Underwood; S. R. Churchill; Lorenzo Coleman; John A. Coleman and others.

David Swain and —— Peasley are names of early settlers who claimed lands in Orono adjoining the line of the town of Minnetrista. William A Stafford having pre-empted and sold a tract of land in what is now known as St. Louis Park, removed to the vicinity of Long Lake where he purchased land of parties who had also pre-empted and has been a resident of the vicinity up to the present.

U. S. SURVEYS.

In 1855 on the completion of the government surveys plats were filed in the United States Land Office, then at Minneapolis, by which the lands north of Lake Minnetonka were opened to entry under which the settlers were allowed to make their claims a matter of record enabling them on complying with certain conditions to hold their claims undisturbed, until they were ready to purchase and obtain title from the Government, upon which many made final entry of their lands.

CORRESPONDENCE

ROCKFORD.

The weather varied a little last Sunday night and rained last Sunday night and Monday.

The conundrum social in the G. A. R. Hall, Tuesday, for the benefit of the M. E. church was well attended.

Mr. Owen Davis has sold his farm north of Rockford and will dispose of the rest of his farm property by auction. We understand he intends to give up farming and try city life a while.

Mr. P. Leiderbach is very ill and at this writing not expected to live.

C. M. Johnson spent Sunday in Buffalo Out in the rain again, Eh.

Mr. A. Ingerson, of Independence, is surveying in this vicinity for Mr. A. W. Dorman.

Rev. Mr. Higgins, of Annandale, and Rev. C. H. Davis, of Buffalo, attended the conundrum social Tuesday night.

Look out boys! Leap year you know. There is talk of a leap year party in the Centennial hall, Friday night, Feb. 5th to be given by the young ladies of Rockford.

Among those who visited the cities the past week were Mr. and Mrs. Moore, F. N. Wooden, W. C. Hawk, D. R. Thompson, E. Miller and James Stoddard.

J. M. Powers was shaking hands with friends in Rockford this week.

MAPLE LAKE.

There was quite a large attendance at the "Literary" Saturday evening January 30. Nearly all the exercises on the program took place. There is a progressive interest manifested by those who attend and by all who take part in the exercises. All the exercises were done well.

These are the exercises of the evening: Music, Band; Recitation, Miss Caroline Hauch; Recitation, Master George Gorman; Declamation, Miss Mary J. Gorman; Recitation, Miss Delia Foley; Recitation, Miss Ethel Lucas; Essay J. F. Collins. Question debated: Resolved—That moral suasion is more powerful than legal suasion. The debaters on the affirmative were Dr. O'Connor, Joseph Kevany and Henry Jude and those on the negative were A. A. Jewett and J. F. Collins. The president having announced the debate to be in order, Mr. Collins asked that the question be changed, not a new one substituted but that the one on the program be so modified as to give his side a larger field from which to take more tangible weapons. The affirmative perceiving that though the change would leave their side of the question substantially the same still the modification would give considerable additional advantage to the negative, hence they objected. And though Mr. Collins streniously urged, the concession was not granted.

The judges were R. M. Glynn, P. H. Leahy and Mr. Phenny. The decision was in favor of the affirmative. The president, Dr. O'Connor having to debate and the vice president, Henry Bartholomew being absent, Albert Westrup occupied the chair part of the time. Mr. Collins manifests a good deal of literary enthusiasm by coming regularly from French Lake to take part in the literary exercises. Without wishing maliciously, to suggest any doubt as to his literary zeal, we may express the opinion that it is not improbable John is attracted by the "angelic" portion of the literary circle. We wish to be explicit. While the portion of this community generally designated "the gentle sex" can take rank with that of any other for those good qualities that "wear well" yet some are adorned with peculiar charms and graces. In the ecstacy of his classic imagination, John spoke of the latter as "angels without wings".

"SPECTATOR."

ST. MICHAELS.

The fine weather we had for a few days has changed. A mixture of snow and rain is falling, making all work disagreeable.

Dick Bros. are at work with a full force of men cutting their supply of ice on the Crow. They report same to be 8 to 12 inches thinner than last year.

The hauling of sand to our new church for plastering same will begin again this week. It is promised to have the church finished for services on Easter.

Mr. J. A. Miller, the contractor of our new church, can be nothing but recommended, as he proves to be a first class workman. All work is done in the best possible way and the congregation can be congratulated for having let the contract to him.

It is understood that some of our professional tattle-backs will be called upon to prove some of their woeful tales that they are so fond of telling around about other people. Persons of this character are despicable and should be prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

By all appearances some of our male citizens anticipate cultivating a new and improved crop on their upper lip as they seem to have the soil ready for replanting, which will happen as soon as the seed arrives.

LONG LAKE.

Martin Martinson who received serious injuries about the head by a fall in F. C. Pillsbury's barn abont ten days ago is now on his way to recovery.

Bert Hainlain, a salesman in Christlieb's s store was taken ill about a week ago with a cold or the grippe. He has been remaining with his folks at Winsted ever since where it is hoped he will soon regain his health.

Miss Villa Lydiard is spending a few days at home taking a recreation from her studies at Minneapolis.

The progressive euchre at D. A. Lydiard's was a success.

Murray Winslow is home for a few days.

Ed Jackson, of Maple Plain was seen in our village a few days ago.

G. M. Gress and wife, of Sleepy Eye, Minn., are visiting at Mrs. Johnston's on the north Watertown road.

The supervisors of Orono during the last week examined routes for roads prayed for in petitions presented to them.

STRAWBOARD GOES UP.

Each Ton Will Cost $10 More Than Heretofore.

NOBLESVILLE, IND., JAN. 29.—An agreement has been signed by all the strawboard mills in Indiana by which prices for 1892 will be 30 per cent higher than they were last year, and consumers will be compelled to pay $40 per ton for strawboard, instead of $30 as heretofore. This will advance the price of all materials packed in pasteboard boxes. The agreement was brought about by the American strawboard company, otherwise known as the Strawboard trust, which has hitherto been at war with the smaller concerns. The works in this city belong to the trust.—Globe.

Rockford W. C. T. U.

ROCKFORD, Jan. 27, 1892.

MR. EDITOR.—Looking over the past few months of our Unions work we can say it is increasing in interest, as well as numbers. We know the public meetings have done some good. Mr. John G. Woolley's lecture of Jan. 18, evening, was just the one needed for our young people, while the older could take quite a share to themselves. Taking things as they stand we think the cause is progressing.

"Standing on the promise that cannot fail,
When the howling storms of doubt and fear arise,
By the living word of God we shall prevail."

We are circulating literature here and there, we are not discouraged but firm in our work. "We will work on till the battle is fought, and victory won"

"O list to the prayers of the poor weeping wife,
Misery, suffering, anguish and strife,
The little ones barefooted, ragged and cold,
O come to their rescue, and bravely take hold."

This cry for help comes from all over the land. God hears this cry, in the midnight watches. He sees their tears, and help is coming, it is a little cloud seen in the distance, it grows larger, comes faster, soon will burst in tryumph and the "legalized saloons must go! Long and slow the days of gleaning, but again I say.

"By the living word of God we shall prevail."

THE Chicago man who filched a girl's pocketbook while kissing her is the best example of total depravity yet found.

"AUNT" CLARA VOORHEES died at Princeton, N. J., the other day, aged 97 years. She was known to every scholar at Princeton college where she had lived for the past sixty years.

WARD MCALLISTER figures up that a gentleman can live decently in New York and keep a family on $183,952 a year. Now, if Mr. McAllister will try his hand at showing how a man can honestly earn enough to live on "decently," he will be doing the country a real service.

THERE is a new kind of pavement made partly of cork. Cork and several other ingredients are pressed into blocks, which are said to make a pavement at once moderate in cost, durable, silent, non-absorbent and affording a foothold for horses. Some of it has been in use in London with satisfactory results.

MANY men have known what it is to be responsible for the acts of wife and children, but it is carrying the law to the extreme when a man is held responsible for his dog, as has been a Philadelphian. The dog stole a pair of boots and a sled, carrying them home, and now his owner is held responsible for the theft.

THE forty-fourth anniversary of the discovery of gold at Sutter's sawmill in El Dorado county, Cal., was celebrated in New York the other night by the associated pioneers of the territorial days of California with a dinner. As the years roll on death plays sad havoc in the ranks of the sturdy gold diggers of '49, and there was less than a half hundred left to tell the tales of the olden days.

SORosis has been discussing in Boston how best to manage husbands, and about all the members had something to say on the subject during the debate. Probably the best suggestion came from Lily Devereaux Blake, who proposed, as the best rule for marital happiness, that the wife should not always ask her husband where he was going when he went away, and where he had been when he came back.

OF the 328,617 divorces granted in the United States for twenty years, 216,176, or 65.8 per cent. of the whole, were granted to wives on their petitions for divorce from their husbands, and 112,546 were granted husbands for the alleged fault of the wives, being 34.2 per cent of the whole number; that is to say, in the proportion of nearly two to one it is the wife who seeks a divorce rather than the husband.

THE best known of these peaceable settlements of international controversies was that between the United States and Great Britain in 1872 on account of the "Alabama claims," which matter was referred to five arbitrators named by the United States, England, the Swiss republic, the king of Italy and the emperor of Brazil, respectively. In a dispute between England and France in 1843 the king of Prussia acted as arbitrator.

AT the instance of several philanthropic ladies of high station "Enemies of Tobacco Smoking" have been formed in St. Petersburg. Every member of such a "circle" pledges himself not to smoke and to discourage smoking in others. The money which such a member would spend on tobacco or cigars from the time he joins the circle to September 1, 1892, he pays to the society, to be sent to the famine-strieken communities.

FERDINAND WARD, the ex-Napoleon of finance, who wrecked the firm of Grant & Ward, will be a free man in a short time. His term in Sing Sing will soon expire. Ward has learned the printer's trade in prison. From the prison printing office Ward issued on New Year's a beautiful and artistic souvenir calendar, designed and executed by himself. He has been a quiet prisoner and shortened his term by good behavior.

LOCAL scientists are much interested in a curious piece of gold-bearing meteoric rock recently found in Calaveras county, Cal., by Geologist H. W. Turner. This meteoric stone is about as big as a man's fist, but its peculiar feature is that it is flicked with gold, and the precious metal in one place is fully one inch square on the surface. When cut the rock shows white like nickel. Turner says he considers this proof that there is gold in the stars.

COUNT TOLSTOI has written a long letter to a New York paper giving his personal observations and experiences in the famine district of Russia. It may correct some impressions in America to know that this celebrated philanthropist and author acquits the general government and the local functionaries of either indifference or procrastination in relief for the sufferers from famine, but he finds that, with all that has been done, and with all that Russia can do, more than half the suffering must remain unless people more fortunately situated contribute to their relief.

THE lawyers of the late Mrs. Jane Kingsbury made a strange find in her residence at Lynn, Mass. When she died no trace of any property could be found for several days, but finally the executors came across several documents concealed in a chest in a 'spare' bedroom. They represented property amounting to $30,000. The search continued, and $60,000 was found in the house. Of this sum $14,000 was in gold pieces in denominations ranging from $1 to $20. The balance was in currency. This money was found hidden in the bottoms of trunks. bureau drawers and beds.

This is Columbian year, as it might be called, since it is the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus, in honor of which the inauguration of the big centennial in Chicago will be begun; it is also presidential year, and likewise it is a leap year, in which ladies who have been slighted and left ungathered by the ungallant bachelors have been granted by popular custom the right to choose a life-companion from the ranks of the sterner sex, and can do something more than hint for the proposal which they crave and would accept.

LATER.

Tenement House Burned.

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—To-night an alarm was sent out for a fire at No. 89 Hester street, a five-story brick tenement house, and a call for four ambulances were sent out at the same time. The blaze started from an overturned kerosene lamp in the apartments of Solomon Selinzky on the second floor, and soon the three stories above were a mass of flames and the tenants all in an awful panic.

The fire escapes were crowded, which added to the confusion. Some of the unfortunates sprang for their lives and others were knocked to the stone court yard below from the fire escapes. Two of them were undoubtedly fatally injured and four others are suffering from broken limbs and bruised heads. Gustav Kauffman lived on the third floor with his affianced, Fanny Levy. They ran to the fire escape, but were checked by the crowd of other tenants there. Then they went to the roof from which they jumped, locked in each other's arms, to the courtyard below, where they fell bleeding and insensible.

HIS GREAT WORK ENDED.

Death of Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon, the Famous London Divine—His Remarkable Career.

MENTONE, Feb. 1.—Rev. Charles Haddon Spurgeon died at 11:20 Sunday night. His end was painless and he remained in the unconscious condition to which he had dropped to the last. His wife, Dr. Fitzhenry and Mrs. Thorne were present when he died.

Mr. Spurgeon passed a very restless night and his condition Sunday morning gave cause for serious anxiety, though he was able to take a small quantity of milk as nourishment. As the day passed on his condition became critical. At 3 o'clock p. m. he was unconscious and at 6 o'clock he was still in the same condition and weaker. He did not recognize his wife and refused to take food which had to be administered by force. Mr. Spurgeon's body will be taken to England for burial. Mrs. Spurgeon is bearing her affliction bravely.

Charles Haddon Spurgeon was born at Kelvedon, Essex, June 19, 1834, was educated at Colchester, Maidstone and elsewhere, and became usher in a school at Newmarket. Having adopted Baptist views, he joined the congregation which was presided over by Robert Hall at Cambridge, and it was here, while still a school-teacher, that he preached his first sermon, which was listened to with remarkable interest by his auditors who were assembled in a tiny chapel. His services were eagerly sought after this and he became widely known as the "boy preacher." When only 17 Mr. Spurgeon accepted the pastorate of a Baptist church at Waterbeach, whence he removed to the New Park street chapel, Southwark, London.

Mr. Spurgeon first preached before a London congregation in 1853 with so much success that before two years had elapsed it became necessary to enlarge the building, pending which alteration he officiated for four months at Exeter hall. The enlargement of the chapel in Park street, however, proved insufficient, and hearers multiplied with such rapidity that it became expedient to engage the Surrey music hall, and Mr. Spurgeon's followers determined to build a suitable edifice for their services. Two years later in 1861 the Metropolitan tabernacle was opened and there Mr. Spurgeon has since preached every Sunday to congregations averaging 6,000 people.

Among other institutions connected with Mr. Spurgeon's church and established by him are the Stockwell orphanage, founded in 1807, and accommodating about 400 children a year; the Pastors' college, founded in 1856, which has educated over 900 men, of whom most are actively engaged as pastors, missionaries, evangelists, or in some department of the Lord's work; the Metropolitan Tabernacle Coiporterage association, which has about seventy or eighty agents in different parts of the country, who, in addition to other services, sell pure literature in the course of the year to the amount of $50,000. A "Book Fund," carried on in Mr. Spurgeon's house and superintended by him, has in ten years supplied indigent ministers of various denominations free of cost with over 15,000 volumes. Mr. Spurgeon also carried on a society for evangelists at home and another mission work in North Africa. His church has about thirty mission halls and schools affiliated with it. In 1870 Mr. Spurgeon received a "silver wedding testimonial" of over $30,000, and in 1884, on attaining his 50th year, another sum of $25,000 was presented to him. Mr. Spurgeon kept little of what was so generously given him; every cent he could spare went for charity.

In 1887 Mr. Spurgeon gave notice of his withdrawal from the Baptist union of Great Britain and Ireland by publication in his journal, the Sword and Trowel, for November, and in a letter to the secretary of the body, dated October 28. As a reason for taking this step he affirmed that the union was tolerating errors, and permitting a "downward tendency" of ministers in point of doctrine, in that some persons were allowed to remain in it who make light of the atonement, deny the personality of the Holy Ghost, call the fall of man a fable, speak slightingly of justification of faith, refuse credence to the dogma of the plenary inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, and hold that there is another probation after death, with possibilities of a future retribution of the lost. While efforts to induce him to reconsider his decision were without avail, he declared that he remained as much a Baptist as ever, his denominationalism not being affected by his relations with the union, a voluntary, unofficial body.

Even those who could not agree with the letter of his preaching were warmed by the spirit of it to declare him a great and good man. Few preachers have had equal personal or pulpit popularity, while the readers of his sermons live as well on this side of the water as in England.

SHOOK THE WHOLE TOWN.

Explosion of 5,000 Pounds of Dynamite Wrecks a Factory Near Cahokia, Ill.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 1.—Cahokia, a village 4 miles south of East St. Louis, was the scene of great excitement at 4 a. m. Saturday. The people were awakened by a dull, heavy sound, followed by the trembling of the earth, and without dressing themselves the residents rushed from their dwellings in great alarm. No repetition of the shock followed and the shivering residents sought their beds. At 7 a. m. it was learned that the Camile Droit dynamite factory, 1 mile south of Cahokia, had been blown up. The explosion is attributed to spontaneous combustion. No one was killed. Five thousand pounds of dynamite was exploded, wrecking everything in the neighborhood of the factory and digging a deep hole in the ground.

IT IS ACCEPTED.

Chili Notified that Her Apology Is Ample —No Demand for a Salute to the Flag.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—Secretary Blaine has sent a cable message to Minister Egan, instructing him to inform the Chilian government that its proposition for settlement of the difference between the two governments made in response to the ultimatum of the 21st instant, is satisfying to the president of the United States, as indicating a good prospect that the controversy can now be adjusted on terms satisfactory to this government by the usual diplomatic methods. The telegram makes no request or suggestion of any kind whatever for a salute by Chili to the American flag. There was nothing said at Friday's cabinet meeting on this subject, and there is no reason to believe that this government will require such a salute from Chili. It is very possible, however, that Chili will on her own accord perform this graceful act at the termination of the diplomatic adjustment of all difficulties which is now in progress.

The following is the text of the cable message sent by Secretary Blaine accepting Chili's proposition for settlement of the differences between the two governments:

"DEPARTMENT OF STATE, WASHINGTON, Jan. 30, 1892.—To Egan, minister, Santiago: I am directed by the president to acknowledge the receipt of Senor Pereira's dispatch of the 25th inst. It has been communicated to congress, and has given great pleasure to the people of the United States and to the executive department, as it restores the correspondence between the two republics to a basis of cordiality and makes, as he believes, a full and honorable adjustment of all unsettled matters easily attainable.

"The president notes with gratification the expressions of regret for the condemnation of the assault upon the sailors of the Baltimore, offered by Mr. Pereira, and congratulates the Chilian government upon the frank and ample withdrawal of the Matta circular and upon the spirit of justice displayed towards Minister Egan. You will assure the Chilian government that the president will be glad to meet in the most generous spirit these friendly overtures.

"Believing that the subject of reparation for assault upon the seamen of the Baltimore is now capable of adjustment between the two governments by the usual diplomatic methods the president proposes for the present any discussion of the suggestions made by Senor Pereira as to the use of other methods, not doubting that the sense of justice of Chili will enable the two governments to speedily and honorably make full end of the whole matter. BLAINE."

As to the amount to be paid to the relatives of Riggin and Turnbull, the sailors who were killed, the Chilian government may find, when it comes to investigate the matter, that in several states of the union the enlightened judgment of the people speaking through their legislatures has fixed the limit that may be recovered for damages in case of death at $5,000. In the matter of injury, however, the limit of damages lies within the province of the petit jury. Patrick Shields, the sailor on the Keweenaw, who was also a victim of Chilian violence in Valparaiso, has filed by his attorneys a claim for $50,000 damages, which the attorney asks the state department to collect.

A MARINE DISASTER.

A British Vessel Wrecked on the Pacific Coast—Twenty Sailors Perish.

ABERDEEN, Wash., Feb. 1.—The British bark Ferndale, which went ashore 10 miles north of the entrance to Gray's harbor Friday, is now a total wreck about 1 mile off shore and of her crew of twenty-three men all but three sailors are drowned. A terrific gale and exceptionally high tide prevailed at the time. The sea ran higher than was ever before known. When she struck the officers and crew at once prepared to reach shore, but they had little time in which to make their preparations. It was impossible to successfully launch their boats with the tremendous sea running, and although an attempt was made the frail craft were almost immediately swamped.

Nothing was left for the crew to do but to lash themselves to the yards and broken pieces of masts. Soon after the sea broke over the stranded ship and several of the crew were washed away. The last man to leave the deck was Capt. Blair. Three of the seamen reached the shore on pieces of drift and the body of the mate was afterward picked up on the sandy beach incased in a life-preserver, but no trace of the others could be found. The Ferndale was a new vessel and was on her first trip to the coast. It was also the first visit of Capt. Blair to this coast. The vessel was worth about $90,000.

HOOTED BY A MOB.

Ungracious Treatment Accorded William O'Brien by Parnellites in a Tipperary Town.

DUBLIN, Feb. 1.—William O'Brien arrived at Thurles, county Tipperary, Saturday. While on his way from the railway station to the Episcopal palace, the residence of Archbishop Croke, he was recognized by a number of Parnellites, who followed him. They were joined by others, until finally Mr. O'Brien was surrounded by a menacing crowd, who kept him company to the very gates of the palace. He was hooted and jeered and all manner of epithets were hurled at him. Some of the mildest terms of reproach addressed to him were "renegade" and "murderer," and between the insults the crowd amused themselves by cheering for John E. Redmond, who defeated Michael Davitt, the McCarthyite leader, at the recent parliamentary election at Waterford, and for other prominent Parnellites.

DOUBLE TRAGEDY.

Jacob Somborn Shoots His Cousin and Then Kills Himself.

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—Jacob Somborn shot his cousin Saturday, Julius Somborn, who is now in a precarious condition. When the officers attempted to arrest the would-be murderer, he shot himself and died almost immediately. Julius is a wealthy wine merchant, and it was in his office, at 67 Broad street, that the tragedy occurred. The murderer and suicide was a pensioner on the bounty of his wealthy cousin, and often came to the office to get money. A refusal to continue the practice, was the cause of the tragedy.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

Must Close Out Business.

The report of State Bank Examiner Kenyon to Gov. Merriam, recommending that the affairs of the American Building and Loan association of Minneapolis be wound up with all possible dispatch, created unusual excitement in business circles. The American is one of the largest building associations in the country, having assets alleged to reach $11,000,000. Its patrons are located in every state in the union. The report shows that the real estate of the association is held at a fictitious value, produced by the accumulation of delinquent taxes.

Anticipated Rush to Indian Lands.

H. S. Morris, the United States agent located at Brown's Valley, who made the allotments to the Indians of the Sisseton reservation, says that, judging from the present indications, the rush of settlers into this fertile tract of land which is to be thrown open next spring will be unprecedented. The reservation contains 918,000 acres, of which 280,000 acres have been allotted to the Indians. This leaves a balance of 630,000 acres to be opened for settlement under the homestead laws.

A Red River Valley Boom.

The railway companies entering St. Paul are receiving letters in large numbers from the Red river valley asking that more farm laborers be sent to that country in the spring. Two letters received are from Fargo and another from a farmer further up the valley. Each states that 10,000 laborers would be needed in that country during the coming season. An editor at Mayville writes that 330 will be needed at that point alone.

To Pool the Fruit Trade.

The fruit commission firms of Minneapolis and St. Paul have formed a close corporation which is designed to control absolutely the fruit business which centers in the two cities. Every firm in the twin cities has given its adhesion to the scheme. The association will buy all the fruit for the jobbing trade here which supplies the northwest. The fruit business is one of large interest, aggregating $15,000,000 a year.

Wrong Use of a Postal Card.

Lennon by means of a postal card sent through the mails. The penalty for the offense is either or both a fine of $500 and five years' imprisonment.

A FOOLISH SAYING.

"The world owes me a living,'
I hear some people say;
But I think 'tis very foolish
To speak in such a way.
And I'd like to ask the reason,
Forsooth, how it can be,
The world should owe a living
To either you or me?

'Tis a very silly saying,
And only those who shirk
Would expect to get a living
From other people's work.
And I'd really like to ask them—
For it puzzles me as yet—
Just how the world has happened
To get into their debt?

If they do their share of labor,
They may claim their share of ease;
But drones are out of favor,
In this busy hive of bees,
And I'd like to tell them plainly
(Though no offense is meant)
That our bustling world is honest,
And owes no man a cent!

AN UNLUCKY KICK.

How a Soldier Lost His Foot in Battle.

His Irresistible Impulse to Stop a "Spent" Cannon Ball—A Maimed Veteran Who Has Never Applied for a Pension.

It was a cold day, but the colonel was comfortable in mind and body. Business had gone well with him. He had had a good breakfast. He was making a trial trip in a new overcoat, which was as well suited to blustery weather as any he had ever worn. As he stood at the corner waiting for the car he was at first amused and then interested in the movements of a man who wore no overcoat, who had only one foot, and who was making believe that he was not cold. The colonel finally said: "You seem rather shivery, my friend." Quick as a flash came the reply: "I am. I have no more blood than a goose, but there are worse things than shivering around waiting for a job, and I am not as cold as I look. I am not as gay as a lark, but I am happier than a fellow who has the grip."

"What are you standing here for in the cold? Why don't you go home and sit by the fire awhile? A man who has no more blood than a goose ought not to be taking such risks." The colonel smiled good humoredly as he said this, and this smile was answered by one just as good humored on the face of the other. "I have an object," he said. "Do you see that pile of coal? I am lurking about to get a job to carry t in. The lady of the house is not at home, but when she comes I know I will get the job. She knows me. She knows I am all right. She knows I am a good deal better fellow than I look to be."

"Does she know how you lost your foot?"

The whole attitude and appearance of the man changed in an instant, and he said stiffly and somewhat resentfully: "No, do you?"

Again that amused and interested look came over the colonel's face, and he said, smilingly: "No, I don't know. How did you lose your foot?"

"In an accident," said the man. "In an accident in which I got only what I deserved. I was foolhardy and foolish and—well, I lost my foot, and that is all there is to it."

"Didn't lose it in a football game, did you?" The man chuckled and shook his head. "You weren't run over by a street car?" Another shake of the head. "Didn't have it torn off by machinery?" "Not exactly," said the man. "Were you in the army?" A grave affirmative inclination of the head. "Did you lose your foot while you were in the army?" Another nod. "Did you have it shot off?" "Not, not—well, no. No, I can't say that I did. It was a narrow escape, though."

"Well, I don't suppose there was anything to be ashamed of, was there?" The colonel asked this with some impatience, but promptly came the reply: "Oh, yes, there was. I was ashamed of it. I am ashamed of it. I am so ashamed of it that I never tell the story. That is where you missed it. There never was a fellow more ashamed of anything than I am of the way I lost that foot.

"I ou see it was this way. Did you ever see a cannon ball rolling along the ground, whirling and bouncing and looking as harmless as a toy balloon? If you did, did you ever want to kick it?" A queer light came into the colonel's eyes and he nodded and smiled. "Well, I'll bet you sixteen cents you didn't. I'll go you half a dollar you didn't. But that's what's the matter with me. I was a good soldier. I was proud of being a good soldier. I had done good service. I was never in the rear in time of battle. I was not a great man and I knew I was not, but I did my duty and I took great satisfaction in doing it. I had great luck, too, because I was not sick; I had not been in the hospital; I was never in the guardhouse and the boys counted me one of the jolly men of the company, but in one great battle—it was a big fight, I tell you—there was a terrific cannonading and our division was standing in line of battle waiting for the whirlwind to strike us. There was a tremendous racket and confusion on our right, but we had little to do except to stand and watch the scared rabbits and other animals as they rushed blindly pellmell across our front, but every few minutes shells would burst near us or large cannon balls would come rolling obliquely from the left front. One of these rolled almost along our line. We could see it coming; saw it bound up ten or twelve feet when it struck a rock or log, then come whirling along toward us. It was almost as large as a football, and in motion seemed as smooth and polished as finished steel. It had a queer effect on all the men. I saw a dozen get ready to stop it with their feet. I heard the captain shout for them to let the thing alone, but it fascinated me. The idea came into my mind that I could stop it easily, and that I must. So in spite of all shouts and commands I put my foot out to give it a little kick and—I had a foot, or rather I had one foot less.

"I had a good deal of time to think it over, and I came to the conclusion I was the blamedest fool in the corps. They wanted me to go home. They wanted me to take a discharge. I wouldn't do it. I couldn't afford to, you see, so as I began to get about again the colonel took pity on me and put in me in the quartermaster's department, and then when I was spry enough to look after things better he had me detailed to look after his horse and keep things in order in his tent, and in the course of the next year or two I got to see a good deal of fighting, even if I was minus a foot.

"I didn't make a pretty picture riding a horse, but I rode a horse a good deal. The boys laughed at me whenever they saw me. They couldn't get used to the foot, that wasn't there, you know. They couldn't get used to that stump. They said a fellow that had only one foot ought not to ride a horse. But there was a time when the boys cheered me, and you may know when they cheered a wooden-legged man on horseback that there was something to cheer for. It was this way: The regiment was having a hot time and about half the boys were down and the colonel had lost his horse and was on foot and swearing mad about it, when I concluded I'd take him another horse. I jumped on without thinking much about style, you know, and I started into that hornet's nest and the devil was to pay generally. I had to fight for the horse; I had to fight to get to the colonel, but I got there. I jumped off and he got on and the boys rallied round him like a flock of partridges and we all got out. Not much style about it, you see, but the boys cheered me.

"The thing has been a great bother to me ever since the war. There are a great many things that I could have done well if I had had two legs or two feet that I couldn't do with only one foot. People don't like to have you stumping around and making a noise. It is very troublesome, they say, for a man with a stump foot to go upstairs and down, and a fellow may try as hard as he pleases to step easy and he can't. It is stump, stump, stump, stump, and people don't like it. It isn't business, you know, so I haven't had any great success in life, but I have got along better than if I had touched a live wire.

"Then I have the cussedest dreams you ever heard of. Cannon balls bang at me from every direction, bounce over me or scoot under the bed; knock off a leg or an arm, and keep me busy dodging, and occasionally a big forty pounder knocks me out of bed and I wake up on the floor. But this isn't as bad as the jim-jams.

"The great trouble came when I went home. I wouldn't go back to the old neighborhood. I was very sensitive on the question of losing that foot. I came west, and for a good many years had pretty good luck. Of course, I am down now, but I'll be up again—that is to say if I don't get the grippe. I am not as strong as I was and am not as chipper as a bird, but I'm none of your grumblers."

"Why don't you apply for a pension?" asked the colonel.

"Great Scott, ask for a pension on that foot; ask my captain to testify as to how I lost it; ask the boys to tell the story of what they saw that morning? Wouldn't do it for all the money Jay Gould ever had. No sir, no pension for me. I've told lies about that foot for twenty-five years. The general impression is that I lost it in some sneaking, underhanded way, and that I don't care to talk about it. You see if I had stood still and let that blamed cannon ball strike me it would have been all right. But I didn't do that. I met the thing half way. I was like the monkey that put his tail in the snapping turtle's mouth. I did a fool thing, and I got my reward in about half a second."

"Didn't you ever have trouble with the lame leg? Don't you have trouble now?"

"Always have had, always will have. it gives me enough trouble to keep me from being lonesome. Every once in awhile there is a sharp pain in the big toe that isn't there, you know. Now, what in the nation can a fellow do with a big toe that he can't get at, but here comes the lady and I will now put in the coal." And as the colonel turned away the one-footed man stood straight and at attention and gave the salute. The colonel returned the salute, took in at a glance the number of the house and the lady who had stopped to talk to his new acquaintance and passed on.—Inter Ocean.

WINGED LUNCH FIENDS.

The Long Distance Traversed by Condors to Obtain a Meal.

A German resident of Guayaquil describes from personal observations the habits of a pair of condors which to the best of his belief must have their nest somewhere in the upper Andes of Ecuador. Twice a day—once at 9 a. m. and again about 4 p. m.—the giant vultures appear on the Bay of Changa to help themselves to the shellfish stranded by the waves of the tide or the refuse left behind by a crew of tortoise hunters. The process of personal refreshment occupies them about half an hour, after which they select a few portable scraps and soar off in a northeasterly direction, toward the highlands of Rio Tambo. With the aid of a good telescope, they can be seen crossing the line of the coast range and continuing their way in the direction of the grand central chain, in a bee line about two hundred English miles from tide-water. One of the birds can be recognized by a gap in the edge feathers of his left wing, and in spite of that impediment must travel an average of five thousand six hundred miles aweek for alimentary purposes.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

A DEAF AND DUMB BARBER.

Contrary to Expectation, He Did Not Prove a Success.

Impelled by the great outcry against loquacious barbers, a St. Louis barber recently hired a deaf and dumb assistant. But the scheme didn't work. "Though the man was an excellent workman," says the barber, "in less than a week he found his razor almost as inactive as his tongue. He had evidently been through the same experience in other cities, for he very philosophically offered to work at less than scale wages, and did so. I kept him about three months, and then dropped him, for no fault except that he could not work up a regular patrons' trade. When all other chairs were occupied some one would go to him, and he picked up considerable outsiders' business. But the way every-day customers left the chair for others convinced me that the average man expects to be entertained while being shaved, and kicks when he isn't. Deaf mutes seem to make excellent baseball players, but are not phenomenal successes in barber shops."—Chicago Journal.

—England is now admiring the creation of an artificial Venice, on a scale so large as in some sections to be an absolute fac simile of the original. The whole exhibition covers one and a half acres, at the Olympia in London, and the visitor is rowed about in a gondola. The water in the canals is warmed by the Rosher system of heating water, extensively used in swimming baths.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Ex-Senator Hereford, of West Virginia, whose death has recently been reported, was one of the earliest emigrants to California in the "gold fever" days. He was a lawyer at the time, and having settled in Sacramento, became district attorney and took an active share in politics.

—A writer in Belgravia recalls what seems like a mockery of fate. Before the poet, Philip Bourke Marston, became blind, in fact while he was yet an infant, Dinah Muloch, his godmother, apostrophized his beauty in lines beginning, "Look at me with thy large brown eyes, Philip, my king!"

—Mrs. Julia Ward Howe recently said, in speaking of Longfellow, that "his personal charm was in a delicateness that was truly cosmopolitan; he had a vivid appreciation of what was beautiful and noble, and he represented the purest taste and most perfect feeling." Was there ever given a finer definition of a gentleman.

—Mlle. Szumowska, a pupil of the great Paderewski, is to make her debut in London soon. In compliance with her father's wish that she should become a doctor, she passed while very young severe preliminary medical examinations; but her love for music conquered, and she is expected to prove a brilliant pupil of her brilliant master.

—Lieut. Julien Viand, of the French army, well known as "Pierre Loti," recently elected a member of the French academy, has been made commander of the French sloop-of-war Javelot, stationed now at Bidassoa. As the clever writer will bear Spain in his new station, French papers express the hope that he will be inspired to write a book upon the country of the toreadors.

—Dom Pedro's daughter, the Countess d'Eu, who lays claim to her father's hereditary "right" of ruling Brazil, is most unpopular among the Brazilians. She is said to be a bigot, and has very eccentric notions of economy. According to the stories told of her she used to scrub the steps of the royal palace with her own hands as an example for the encouragement of thrift among the people.

—The most prolific German authoress, Amely Bolte, has just died at Wiesbaden at the age of eighty. She began as a governess in London and commenced to write in German in 1851. After that she obtained considerable popularity through the production of more than four hundred romances, of which most were in two or three volumes. An effort to improve the social position of women ran through all her works.

—Mme. the Princess de Sagan, leader of fashions and frivolities, who has contributed more than any other woman to the fortune of Worth, the man-milliner, has a villa at Trouville that reproduces even to details the residence of a Persian millionaire. Everything within the house suggests the land of the shah, even to the picture of Nasr-ed-Din that hangs over the fireplace. This maison Persane is the favorite residence of the princess, who entertains there with a lavish hand.

—A violin once the property of Louis XIV., who was a passionate admirer of the instrument, was recently purchased by a dealer in Buda Pesth. It was made years ago by Master Amati. The violin was sold a few days ago to a "member of the royal house of Prussia" for five thousand gulden. The purchaser, it is supposed, was Prince Henry, the sailor prince, brother of the emperor, who is an excellent performer on the violin. Indeed, the prince has played several times in public, and has acquitted himself with credit. While in Kiel he organized an orchestra among the members of the nobility, and gave concerts at the castle, which became famous in many ways. The prince is one of the cleverest members of the Hohenzollern family.

—Lady of the House—"Why don't you go to work? Don't you know that a rolling stone gathers no moss?" Browning the Bum (from Boston)—"Madam, not to evade your question at all, but merely to obtain information, may I ask of what practical utility moss is to a man in my condition?"—Truth.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Potato Puff: Mix a pint of mashed potatoes (cold is just as good, if free from lumps) with a half-cup of cream and the well-beaten yolk of an egg; salt to taste and beat till smooth; lastly, stir in the white of the egg beaten to a stiff froth. Pile up in a rocky form in a bright tin dish, and bake in a quick oven until heated throughout and lightly browned. Serve at once.—Good Health.

—Pigeon Compote: Truss six young pigeons, as for boiling, and fill their craws with forcemeat, lard them down the breasts, and fry them brown in butter, then put them into a stewpan with a sufficient quantity of good gravy, and when they have stewed three-quarters of an hour thicken it with a piece of butter rolled in flour; serve with the gravy strained over them, and garnish them with forcemeat balls.—Boston Herald.

—A handsome laundry bag may be made of a heavy damask towel with a showy red border. Cut the towel in two and sew on pieces of turkey-red three-eighths of a yard long to each half. Join these at the sides for a bag and make a hem at the top wide enough to run in a red ribbon two inches wide. The fringe ends at the bottom are fastened together with herring-bone stitch in red silk, which may continue all around the sides.

—Chicken on Toast: If the "left over" is scanty, supplement it with half a pound of veal cutlet nicely broiled, cut all in dice, simmer for a few moments in enough stock flavored with anchovy sauce to barely cover, add a little butter, pepper and salt; thicken slightly with cornstarch or flour. Have ready on the platter a square of nice toast and some extra for each person; take the bits of meats out with a spoon, and put sufficient on each bit of toast; pour the gravy over and serve.—N. Y. Times.

—One hears of tonics for the nerves, tonics for the digestion and hair tonics in plenty, but it is only recently that we heard of a tonic for the skin—not a cosmetic in any sense of the word, but a tonic pure and simple, which, it is claimed, helps the circulation, makes the flesh hard and smooth, and is a great preventive of wrinkles. This is the formula: Two ounces of spirits of ammonia, two ounces of spirits of camphor, one cupful of sea salt, two cupfuls of alcohol. Put all in a quart bottle and fill up with boiling water; shake before using. If the face, neck and arms are rubbed with this lotion daily and then dried, they say the effect is very rejuvenating.—N. Y. Tribune.

—Bakewell Pudding: Line a deep pie plate or soup plate with rich pastry and spread upon it a thick layer of stawberry preserves. Over this sprinkle two tablespoonfuls of finely-chopped blanched almonds and one-half ounce of candied lemon peel cut into fine shreds. Melt one-fourth of a pound of butter and mix it with one-half of a pound of sugar. Add the yolks of four eggs and whites of two beaten together, and a few drops of essence of bitter almond. After beating well together, pour over the preserves and bake in a moderate oven. When cold sift powdered sugar over the top. The pudding is to be eaten cold with cream.—N. Y. Independent.

HEARTY BREAKFASTS.

A Mother Who Believes that the Morning Meal Should Be the Principal One.

Our food is taken at the wrong time, and too hastily. The morning is the time for our principal meal, not the evening. Some years ago, during the session of our annual conference, I was the guest of a physician. He one day remarked to me: "You will live to be one hundred years old if no accident befalls you." "Why do you think so?" I asked. "Because I notice that your principal meal is your breakfast."

This is true. I rise from my night's repose hungry, and it is the only time in the day when I have that sensation.

"But,' the reader will say, "I have no appetite in the morning." I will tell you why. You rise in the morning, quickly dress yourself, drop down at the table, swallow in haste a cup of coffee, hurriedly eat a hot roll, seize your hat and rush to the cars or your place of business, drive through your morning work, run into a restaurant, swallow something that an alligator would find it difficult to digest, go back to your study, counting-room or mart of trade, where you are driven by the press and perplexities of business or study until five o'clock, when you hasten home, faint and exhausted, and sit down to your six-o clock dinner.

The same habit of hurry clings to you at this meal, and you bolt a mass of hot meats and the usual etceteras, and go to bed to toss and turn and wrestle with horrid shapes. Your digestive organs are in no condition to receive that mess of matter. The business, the planning, the brain-work of the day has driven the blood to the brain and lungs, thus checking the flow of the gastric dissolvents; and now all night, instead of quiet rest, nature has been at work to remove that half-digested mass of material from the stomach. Do you wonder that you have no appetite in the morning.

Now the stomach, as well as other organs, calls for seasons of rest and recuperation or it will fail in its functional duties. Would you have length of days? Change all this.—Christian Advocate.

The World's Newspapers.

The number of newspapers published in all countries is estimated at 41,000, of which number about 24,000 appear in Europe. Germany heads the European list with 5,000, then comes France with 4,100, England with 4,000, Austria-Hungary with 3,500, Italy with 1,400, Spain with 850, Russia with 800, Switzerland with 450, Belgium and Holland with 300 each, and the rest are published in Portugal, the Scandinavian, and the Balkan countries. The United States has 13,900 newspapers. Canada has 700 and Australia also 700. The people of the United States, therefore, read and support about as many newspapers as England, France, Germany and Russia combined.—Paper.

An Even Chance.

TORTURES FOR HORSES.

How Civilized Man Rewards the Services of a Faithful Dumb Brute.

"Horses are great sufferers from toothache," said a veterinary surgeon. "The complaint is the real cause of many a runaway that is attributed to viciousness. Horses' teeth are very subject to decay, and no attention is paid to dentistry for their benefit, as ought to be the case. Thus it sometimes happens that the metal bit striking upon the exposed nerve of a tooth will set the animal wild in a moment and start him off upon the run. In fact, for the time being, the poor beast is actually crazy and not responsible for what he does.

"Man, who is usually merciful to other animals, is most cruel to the horse. The latter is patient under pain which would make a dog or cat cry aloud, and this is one reason why its suffering is not regarded. Not only is the beast, as a rule, literally worked to death, but all sorts of unnecessary tortures and mutilations are inflicted upon it. The familiar checkrein is one of the mildest of these tortures, though in itself bad enough, the bit is another more severe. People think it is fine to see a noble pair of horses flinging their heads in the air and tossing foam from their mouths. In reality the poor animals toss their heads to relieve the painful strain of the check, which makes the bit so distressing to the mouth, causing the saliva to flow. When you see them shake their heads so nobly, making a rattling of the harness, it is to relieve the corners of their mouths from the galling of the bits. Checkreins ought to be forbidden by law. They were in fashion as far back as the time of the Pharaohs, as ancient sculptures in relief show, and were, doubtless, adopted to hold up the horse's head and make him look spirited.

"Fashion combines with ignorance to torture the horse. To achieve swellness the first thing necessary is to cut away the mane so as to imitate the beasts which draw the sculptured chariots of antiquity. Nature has provided the animal mercifully with a tail for brushing away the flies against which he is otherwise helpless. Therefore the mode requires that this useful and necessary appendage shall be chopped off short, which signifies not merely the cutting of the hair, but the amputation of several of the terminal bones of the spine, the stump being seared with a red-hot iron to make it heal. Any sensible person knows that to 'dock' a horse's tail is to seriously subtract from the creature's beauty; but what does that matter if fashion has promulgated her decree?

"It is upon the improvement of the hoofs of a horse, however, that human ingenuity has been well-nigh exhausted. After the farrier, in shoeing the animal, has scooped the sole to the thinness of paper, cut away the 'frog,' removed the 'pegs,' lowered and cut open the heels, and burned away the wall with red-hot iron the groom takes the matter in hand. Hoofs are naturally mottled with various shades of brown, gray and black, but this does not please the professional eye of the stableman, so he blackens and polishes them carefully with grease and lampblack, thus choking up the pores in the horn and preventing the needful transpiration.

"Another diabolical invention for the discomfort of the horse is the 'blinder,' the object of which is to prevent the animal from seeing things that will frighten him. But the fact is that blinders cause fright instead of preventing it, because, like ourselves, this useful beast fears the imperfectly known. He is not afraid of what he sees and understands, but with blinders on he can neither see nor understand anything.

"Speaking of runaways, there is a contrivance which will stop the most infuriated horse within a few yards without inflicting any pain. It is made of brass, like a bracelet, and when fitted over the animal's nose it is not at all conspicuous. If the beast attempts to run away the driver or rider has only to pull a strap, which has the effect of closing the nostrils. The horse, when its nostrils are closed, is helpless, not being able to breathe, and so is brought quickly to a standstill. Indian squaws have a similar method of teaching their babies not to cry. When an infant raises its voice the mother closes its mouth and compresses its nostrils, and, as the process is repeated whenever the child cries, it very soon learns to be silent. Consequently such a sound as the crying of a baby is never heard in an Indian camp."—Washington Star.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address,

An Important Difference.

Here It Is.

To the man who labors with his hands, physical trouble is a very serious thing. It is not merely the pain he endures, racking and tormenting as it is, but the prospective loss of time, money and place haunts him and aggravates his suffering. He is bent on having prompt relief and sure cure. He wants the best and the proof and here it is: —Mr. W. H. Schroeder, Gilbertville, Iowa, stated April 10, 1884, that he had used St. Jacobs Oil in his stables for horse complaints and upon himself for rheumatism, and had found it the best remedy he had ever tried. Again, Feb'y 11 1887, he writes: "I have used St. Jacobs Oil for rheumatism and sore back, as stated, and it cured; and for burns and bruises it does its work as recommended to do. I always keep it in the house and recommend it to my neighbors." —Mr. John Garbutt, 656 Minna St., San Francisco, Cal., writes: "Some time back I sprained my knee and suffered agony until I tried St. Jacobs Oil. The result was a speedy and permanent cure."—Miss Ida M. Fleming, 7 S. Carey St., Baltimore, Md., says: "I had been afflicted for two years with neuralgia, and tried every means to get rid of the tormenting disease. I had been given so much quinine that my nervous system was seriously injured. I was advised to use St. Jacobs Oil, which I did, and it relieved me entirely."

Notwithstanding the general impression that "money talks," did you ever notice how quiet it is in a bank?—Yonkers Statesman.

Catarrh—Remove the Cause.

I was afflicted from infancy with Catarrh, and for ten years with eruptions on my face. I was attended by the best physicians, and used a number of Blood remedies with no permanent relief. MY LIFE BECAME A BURDEN TO ME, for my case was declared incurable. I saw S. S. S. advertised, and took eight bottles, which cured me entirely, and I feel like a new person.—Miss Josie Owen, Montpelier, Ohio.

I was the victim of the worst case of Catarrh that I ever heard of. I was entirely deaf in one ear, and all the inside of my nose, including part of the bone, sloughed off. No sort of treatment benefited me, and physicians said "I would never be any better." As a last resort I took Swift's Specific, and it entirely cured me and restored my hearing. I have been well for years, with no sign of return of the disease.—Mrs. Josephine Polhill, Due West, S. C. S. S. S. cures Catarrh, like it does other Blood diseases, by eliminating the poison which causes it. Treatise on Blood and Skin mailed free.

DELANO DIARY.

—Read the letter "From the Evergree State" by Rev. W. H. Wilson, in another column of this paper.

—Wash Rader purchased a driving mare from Cyrus Chapman the other day. First class horses are in demand.

—Fred Hilderbrand, of Greenwood, sold a fine two year old mare for $130.00. a few days ago. It pays to raise good horses.

—Hi Dyer was the first man to step up and pay his taxes on Thursday morning. Hi says he dont kick on paying school taxes.

—John H. McGary, of Independence, was in on Wednesday taking advantage of the McKinley bill wheat market, 75 cts per bushel.

—William Rausch, administrator of the Zeirman estate held an auction of the personal property, on Tuesday. He says he realized about a hundred dollars more than he expected he would.

—Rev. Davies made his rounds on Sunday, having recovered from the Grippe, but feeling rather weak. He did not attempt to preach a regular sermon but gave one of his interesting "talks."

—The oldest inhabitants have met another surprise in a rain which began falling on Sunday, evening in time to prevent many from attending church continued through the night and next day.

—Peter Church and wife after spending the winter in Minneapolis, have again moved onto their old farm where they feel more at home among the scenes of their earlier life and the quiet of their country seat.

—Mike and his tandem leader are still at it. They gave a street parade, much to the amusement of many an onlooker, on Tuesday afternoon while the streets were soft and the driver did not fear a collision with the ground.

—The floating sidewalk and over flowed road on River Street causing wet feet to most pedestrians over that route are strong arguments in favor of the establishing of grades for the building of streets and sidewalks. The side walk on second street is not inundated since it was raised.

--On Tuesday afternoon while crossing the railroad on Third street Messrs. Chaffee and Johnson of Independence had the misfortune to get one of their horses feet fast in the track and caused him to come unhitched from the buggy. Had they had a less tractable team serious results might have ensued.

—Mrs. Charles Pratt formerly of Independence, and now visiting there returned a few days ago from Montana, bringing with her an Indian head dress made of cloth with an attachment hanging down the back to the floor, decorated with feathers and surmounted with buffalo horns. The whole when placed in position on a man makes him resemble, quite strongly, a picture of "His Satanic Majesty." John McGary had it on exhibition here Wednesday.

—Young Gentlemen wishing to display their knowledge of Astronomy should be out with their best girls this evening about 7 oclock and casually remark, concerning those two bright stars just above the western horizon, that Venus is the most western of the two, and to-morrow night they should be out again and explain that owing to her having failed to keep up with her running mate she had fallen behind in the race and Jupiter is now nearest the occident.

—If people who think that the school financiering has been first class in the Delano District, in the years gone by will ask Treasurer McKnight what proportion of their tax is for that purpose, when they go to pay him, they will, most likely, meet with a susprise on being informed that more than two thirds of the entire tax is for school purposes or that when they pay $10.00 it is nearly in the proportion of $7.00 for school and $3. for all other purposes for which tax is collected.

—On Monday L. M. Maxfield visited the cities and drew a portion of his pay for building the new depot at Willmar. On his way home he missed his pocketbook from an inside vest pocket, and is about $2000. wiser than before. Mr. M. has the sympathy of the community as he is a hard worker in his business and can illy afford to contribute so large an amount to the support of any one mean enough to take it, or who may have chanced to find it and is to dishonest to return it to the owner.

—Through the kindness of F. F. Chancellor we were permitted to take a few notes from a letter from Mrs. John Droddy, formerly a resident of the town of Franklin, but now living at Colville, Benton County, Ark. She says that there is quite a lot of sickness mostly gripp in their neighborhood, and that the weather has been the coldest known for years reaching 8 degrees below zero. On the 18th and 19th there was a storm. They have had 8 inches of snow on a level. This comes up pretty well towards Minnesota winter weather. We have had a few days colder, but not so much snow.

Clubbing Offer.

We will furnish the BUFFALO GAZETTE and the papers mentioned below for one year for the prices named:

St. Paul Globe, weekly,	$1.75
Minneapolis Times, weekly,	1.80
Louisville Courier Journal, w'k,	1.80
Toledo Blade, weekly,	1.80
Demorest's Magazine	$2.50
The Farmers' Tribune	$1.60

—The M. E. church has been supplied with a new lot of Epworth Hymns and the pastor invites all to join in the singing.

—A new butcher shop has taken possession of the old bank building on R.R Ave. and in the vault where once shown the glittering gold, now lies something far more palatable.

--Delano, Annandale and Waverly each pay 7.1 mills tax for all purposes but school, this being the least tax assesed in any village or town. Howard Lake pays the most, 18.4 mills.

--Hon. B. F. Christlieb has sent us an explanation of the mistake which was made in last weeks "Historical Facts" but it reaches us to late for publication this week.

--Since our neighbor, the soaring bird up street is so fond of finding mistakes we would suggest that she turn her Eagle eyes upon her own columns and see how she has manufactured a live Irishman out of an innocent Carver county lawyer, "Mr. O'Dell," of Chaska.

--Judging from the amount of taxes paid for school purposes Delano should have the best schools in the county for she pays 16 mills on the dollar for that purpose which is the highest in the county several paying as low as 1 mill.

--"Max" has agan been heard from in some way or another he drifted to Willmar where he has been "holding cases" until last Tuesday he was seen on the train bound for Minneapolis in search of "skates." When he left here it was "sprinter" he wanted. Max is a good printer all the same.

—The time is drawing near when the village and township committees should get together and post notices for caucuses for the spring elections which will occur in a few weeks. Let the best men be nominated and elected to each office. Give due notice, gentlemen, and dont rush matters through on the last day.

—One young man seems to have had the sand to call at the Editorial sanctum of our neighbor, and inform him of one of his glaring errors, in publishing him as presenting a newly married couple with a baby 'plate and tin rattle.' This week's Eagle lays it all on to the person handing it in. Why dont the bird fly around and get the news herself?

—Treasurer Frank McKnight and his assistant, George Carpenter, opened up in Young's Hotel office on Thursday for a three days stay. They seem to be doing considerable business, mostly ready cash. Their customers, however, after depositing large sacks of "spurious coins" a la the Buffalo silver tongued orator, seem to be able to carry the returns received in their "vest pocket".

--A. C. Rogers commenced suit against Jacob L. Bryant on Thursday for slander complanning that Bryant reported that he carried whiskey to the school house while teaching in district no 82, in Hennepin county, known as the Rader district, claiming damage in the sum of $5160. W. C. Odell and M. A. O'Hair for plaintiff. The suit will be tried in the district court of Hennepin county.

--J. B. Dugan, "the straightest man in town" has proven his title as to knowledge of "historical facts" and discovered a discrepency in our history. He claimed, and stuck to it, in the face of all opposition, which was considerable, that the battle of Waterloo was not fought until after the battle of New Orleans was won. The Eagle, we presume heard of the confab going on concerning this discussion and, true to her nature, seeks to take all the honor and throw our historian, Hon. B. F. Chritlieb into disrepute, by referring to the matter slightingly. If the Eagle is so wise she should know how to spell the English commander's name and should have told us that we ought to spell Pakenham without c.

—Not enough interest was taken in the election of officers at the Delano Cemetery Association to bring together a quorum of the board even. And as no one else came no election was held. The old board holding over. Get a move on you folks or the Grippe or some other enemy of mankind may suddenly serve a summons on you to appear at the cemetery on three days notice and there will be no excuse taken. You will appear. If you wish the title clear to your last resting place or that of your friends you had better come out on the occasion of the annual election of officers and elect a board that will attend to the matter. The board has held over until they do do not feel like going on without recognition by the people who are interested. The present board has had the cemetery fenced and cleaned up and it is in better shape than for a long time, but a good deal remains to be done especially about having deeds made out to persons who have friends buried there.

—Fair Day tomorrow Feb. 5.

—Read the old Settlers Program in this weeks paper, and prepare to attend the meeting.

—Snow ball throwing and, 10x12 panes of glass cost 10 cents, each. Ask Charley Green.

—Station agent Bolton is a team of himself in delivering express goods. He don't wait for anything. Not he.

—A. J. Hayes, of Montrose, called in today and renewed his subscription for the Courier-Journal and Buffalo Gazette.

—A. R. Chaffee will hold a public sale at his place in Independence on the Watertown road, on Saturday the 13th inst. He intends trying some other business than farming for a while.

Personals.

Hon. B. F. Christlieb of Long Lake was a Gazette visitor on Wednesday.

Mrs. Peter Church took the early morning train for a visit to the Cities.

County Cullings.

T. W. Pettis, son of S. W. Pettis, of Kasota township, came down from Montrose, Wright Co., some ten days ago to see his old stamping grounds and friends. Young T. W. returns to Montrose the latter part of the week.--St. Peter Tribune.

The President of the old settlers Association, in a letter to Geo. Florida, published in the Eagle gets back at the Buffalo Journal concerning its tirade on that associations past, present and future, in great shape. J. N. was, is and will be one of them, while A. Y. can hardly be counted with the crowd.

The Eagle claims credit for having saved the county $6.29 after all her blowing and puffing about Sheriffs fees and such things, and still they dont seem to have got it out of John Nugent either. The Eagle's s-c-r-e-e-c-h-e-s are getting to be rather weak when it requires so much time and space to save the county $6.29 as they have devoted to this case which would probably have been adjusted about as quickly if they had kept still.

INDEPENDENCE.

The warm weather during the past week makes a fellow feel mean just like he had stole something but no doubt we will get change a before many days.

Do not get much news just now. Most everybody has been sick and they have not strength enough left to peddle news.

The fields look as if a fellow might go farming in a few days.

Many are the wolf stories we hear now-a days, there has been quite a number seen in this part of the country, so say reports.

Our milk men are putting up ice and some of our farmers too get most of their ice from Lake Independence. It is of a very fine quality.

Mrs. George Washington has gone to visit her father who lives at St. Louis Park will be absent for some time.

Mr. and Mrs. French and Mr. and Mrs. Jackson, of Maple Plain, are all on the sick list, also Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland.

The W. R. C., of Maple Plain, had installation of officers last Saturday afternoon. Mr. Jacob Beal acted as installing officer.

E. Conover was up from the city last week. He is looking well and says prospects are good.

Quite a number of persons in this community have bought the electric belt and from now on will be run by electricity. It is said they will work marvelous wonders.

Married, at the home of the bride's parents, on the 27th of last month by Rev. Sherwin, of Watertown, Mr. Grant Beal to Miss Eva Batdorf in presence of a full house. The contracting parties are residents of Independence. They received quite a number of presents. The boys called on them two nights with saws, horns, etc. but guess did not make much of an impression.

Some of the prosperous farmers of Independence will build for themselves new dwelling houses in the early spring.

Adolph Weidenbaugh and Mr. Jacobs are among the number who say the farmer is not prosperous.

Another good rain on last Sunday night and Monday. No doubt it will help us out in the spring.

Your correspondent called on the county treasurer of Hennepin county one day last week. Find that taxes in this county are away up in the pictures. Have always admired the push and energy of the Minneapolis people, but in this mammoth court house business think they have saddled a Jonah upon the people of Hennepin county. They certainly have erred exceedingly in judgement in putting a four or five million dollar court house right in the centre of the city surrounded by other massive buildings which hides it from view, ten rods away. The neat little court house at Buffalo with its beautiful grounds that surround it will be far more desirable to look upon.

Prohibition club meeting at Town Hall, Armstrong to-night. They have quite a program to be carried out.

The Democratic, Republican, Alliance, Prohibition meeting at Armstrong on Tuesday night was quite largely attended and an interesting time had. Each party was represented by an essayist who strove to impress the audience with the idea that his was the right political party.

SCHOOL INSPECTION.

It will Begin In Earnest Next Wednesday, by the Health Board.

Beginning on Wednesday, Commissioner of Health Kelly will begin a thorough and systematic inspection of all the public schools in the city. The inspection will be conducted on the same plan stated several days ago in the Evening Tribune. At the conclusion of the investigation the board will make its reccomendations to the school board with reference to heating, ventilation and sanitary changes necessary. The public buildings will also be inspected in turn as well as the office buildings about city.—The Evening Tribune.

M'KINLEY'S TARIFF.

Senate Sub-Committee Examining into its Workings.

Press News Association.

New York, Jan. 18.--United States Senators Aldrich, Allison, Hiscock, Harris and Carlisle arrived in the city last night from Washington. They compose the sub-committee of the Senate committee on finance, appointed to make inquiry into the various matters connected with the tariff and its effect on prices in certain classes of merchandise and manufactures.

The committee held several meetings in this city during the summer, but did not conclude their investigation among importing merchants here. A meeting is being held at the custom house to-day.--St Paul Daily News.

A Golden Nugget

A strange novelty is this golden table corn with its beautiful rich cream color. It is claimed by those who know it that it is very sweet early and tender, and a superior corn. We notice Vick recommends it very highly. The Floral Guide, which comes to us bringing a bouquet of Carnations on the front cover, with a splendid bunch of Brilliant Poppies on the back, gives full description of this new corn, which is only 15 cents a packet. Vick's Floral Guide is worthy a place in the home of anyone who expects to make a garden the coming spring. By all means send ten cents to JAMES VICK'S SONS ROCHESTER N. Y., for the Guide, and you can deduct this amout from your first order. It will pay you well.

DEMOCRATIC CALL.

Tuesday, June 21, Officially Named for the Convention.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—The Democratic national convention today issued the following call:

The national Democratic committee, at a meeting held this day, in the city of Washington, D. C., has appointed Tuesday, the 21st day of June, 1892, as the time and chosen the city of Chicago as the place for holding the national Democratic convention. Each state is entitled to a representation therein equal to double the number of representation to which it is entitled in the next electoral college, and each territory and the District of Columbia shall have two delegates. All Democratic conservatives, citizens of the United States, irrespective of past political associations and differences, who can unite with us in the effort for pure, economical and constitutional government are cordially invited to join us in sending delegates to the convention.

CALVIN S. BRICE, Chairman,
SIMON P. SHEERIN Secretary.

JOHN J. KNOX Father of the National Banking System is dead.

ENGLAND'S greatest preacher, Spurgeon, has passed unto his reward.

EDITOR Pease of Anoka was elected on Thursday, President of the Editorial Association.

THE new members of the state board of Health are Dr. Charles F Mc Comb, of Duluth, and Dr. W. J. Mayo. of Rochester.

FROM the Litchfield news Ledger we learn that John Stark, of Acton and others in Meeker county have found hard coal of good quality at a depth of 10 feet. A fine thing for that County.

FOR Blaine's letter of declination; for an account of the burning of Hotel Royal, New York; and Ex-Governor Thayer's letter to Governor Boyd, of Nebraska, see second page of this paper.

WALTER H. SANBORN, of St. Paul, has been appointed judge of the eighth judicial district, which includes Arkansas, Colorado, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wyoming, Indian Territory, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Utah.

The Political Outlook.

Since the withdrawal by James G. Blaine by a very short letter to Chairman Clarkson, of the National Republican Committee, of his name from the contest for nomination to be held at Minneapolis, in June it looks more as if Harrison might lead the Republican ticket in the next campaign. Blaine evidently is to be counted out, as, from reports of those having visited him, Capt. Snider among them, he is physically unable to think of entering the race. In case the Blaine forces cannot concentrate on Harrison some dark horse will loom up, probably there will be no lack of dark horses as the Blaine boom has been so strong and hung on so long as to give a good opportunity for such.

Among the Democratic aspirants Grover Cleveland is still in the lead with the masses, with Hill strong in New York. In case it is found that the Democratic ship is safe without New York, Grover will doubtless be the candidate. In case it figures out that New York must be Democratic in order to elect the Democratic President, some other man, probably Carlisle, will stand a good chance of being the Democratic nominee. Hill, it must be admitted is something of a rustler but the majority of western people would prefer a longer and better acquaintance than they have, before nominating him for so exalted a position. Gordon, of Georgia, has some following, Palmer, of Illinois, Boies, of Iowa, Russ l, of Massachusetts, and others could be persuaded to take their chances. Good Democratic timber is not so scarce as to tie the party up to one, or even two men, from which to choose the candidate for President.

Ignatius Donnely, in this section, seems to be the Alliance, or People's party candidate for the position.

Joseph Cook, of Boston, leads for the Prohibition ticket.

Belva Lockwood will, as usual of course be a candidate.

Why I Am A Democrat.

DEMOCRACY, a government by the people.

DEMOCRAT, an adherent to Democracy.

DEMOCRATIC, relating to a popular government.

First, would say am a Democrat not because my father and my grandfather was but have been and am a Democrat from principle and honest conviction. Am a Democrat because this nation was born and cradled in Democracy and the principles upon which this government was founded was pure, Democratic principles, framed by Jefferson, Adams and others of like precious faith. More than a century has elapsed since the formation of this government and the establishment of our free institutions and yet the present generation may have left the teachings and traditions of our Revolutionary fathers somewhat, yet the principles and the government they fought to establish should be dear to hearts of every American citizen.

Am a Democrat because Democrat principles guarantee to every American citizen equal rights and privileges. Pure Democratic principles do not defile the body nor enslave the poor that they may become servants to the rich but gives every American citizen the right to build for himself a fortune and a name that will go down to posterity, honored by generations yet unborn.

Am a Democrat because Democratic principles are in favor of the poor, the needy and the destitute. It gives encouragement to the toiling masses, it brightens the prospect of the hardy pioneer and causes the heart of the whistling plow-boy to rejoice. Were not the constitution of the United States and the declaration of American independence conceived and brought forth from under the pen of men who foreknew that a government built and established upon the Democratic principles they brought forth would stand and stand forever. No sculptor's chisel could erase it, neither could the mask of time deface it.

Am a Democrat because that party believes in an administration, pure and simple and one that divides its interest equally with the masses and favors no class legislation.

Am a Democrat because we find it was under Democratic rule that our National debt was reduced to its lowest minimum amounting to only $39,513. The Democrats believe in hard money as a basis and not a spurious substance.

Am a Democrat because that party is in favor of only enough duty on imports to defray the expenses of the government, believing that a high protective tariff is no benefit to the producing class.

Am a Democrat because we believe if whisky is sold at all it should be sold upon its own merits and not under the cover of a license making the state and nation necessary to the crime.

Am a Democrat because that party favors that industry, making dairy butter instead of oleomargerine.

Am a Democrat because that party has hung on to the heels of the Republican party for thirty years or more and kept them from running headlong into the middle of the ocean with the United States treasury and all, same as did the swine when the devil entered into them. The Democrat party is in favor of giving cheap and wholesome food to the deserving poor and substantial woolen goods in place of shoddy.

Am a Democrat because true Democratic principles compels him, when his country is invaded by the enemy to fight for his home and fireside and the flag of his country. True Democracy favors free thought, free speech and free pres and allows all her subjects to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience.

Am a Democrat because its principles are broad and far reaching. It protects the peasant as well as the merchant, the boatcarrier as well as the banker and protects the farmer as well as the millionaire. It fosters love for the poor and needy and in time of pestilence, famine or disease, Democracy is the vanguard that first enters the home of the destitute, administering to their wants and necessities. It engenders peace, not strife, it brings prosperity, not adversity, it brings liberty, not slavery and above all Democratic principles are necessary for the upbuilding of a healthy and prosperous government where all mankind may enjoy equal rights and privileges being the slaves and servants of none.

These are a few of the reasons why I am a Democrat. There might be many more added but time and opportunity will not admit at present.

Hoping the political campaign of '92 will be a healthy and prosperous one to the Prohibition party I remain yours truly until after next November election.
J. H. McCray.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

MEDINA—1855.

While the English speaking people were settling the country about Long Lake, Lake Minnetonka and westward, the Germans were flanking them on the north, extending their settlement which has been previously mentioned as beginning in 1854, through the town of Medina during the year 1855, in about the following order as to names and locations beginning in the spring of the latter year, namely: George Reiser, John Merz, Leo Stumpf, Andrew Scherer, John Wolsfield and Anthon Baumeister, with their families, also Adam Scherer and Peter Behrns, single.

John Wolsfield settled on the north end of the Lake known by his name where in July 1852 he was found by old neighbors of his former home in Trier, Germany, namely: Bernard Gaspar, Matthias Miller and wife and three sons; Peter, Edward and Nicholas Miller and also by Nicholas Classen, Wolsfield having opened a road from that of a previous settler, perhaps that of Reiser or Merz, by which his old neighbors found him and they. Gasper, Miller and his sons and Classen in turn opened roads to locations selected by them, other German settlers continuing this process of opening roads to their respective locations, all being extentions of that route, opened from Garrison's road east of Wayzata by Joseph Wilson's, Fred'k Rohnts' and Matthias Hansman's, over which the German settlers of 1855 found their way into Medina. Following the settlers last mention d others came namely: Jacob Engel, John P. Bourgevies, Wm. Blakeman, Matthias Schwalen, and John Schwalen (son of Matthias) Jacob Baecker, Paul Weydert, William Blakeman, William F. Hillman and family, John Beck, Peter Hopple, Philip Klein, Philip Lerch, Peter Lerch, Peter Schmitz and others.

Samuel Moody and Needham T. Perkins, Joseph B. and Wyman Macomber, Americans, settled in that part of Medina lying South of Lake Independence, during the fall of 1855, Perkins settling on the south shore of the Lake and on the west line of Medina adjoining the claim of his brother John B. in Independence Township where the two brothers later commenced business enterprises, which subsequently developed into a village. They had in their employ one Nollford Alford, a quadroon.

INDEPENDENCE—1855.

In the spring of 1855 Job Moffat returned from the east (Indiana) with his family, taking them to the habitation on Pioneer Creek erected by him the previous fall. Others settled in the vicinity of Pioneer Creek and in the town of Independence during the spring and summer of 1855, namely: John Williams, Irvin Shrewsbury and John R. McGary and their families, of the latter, Ennis and John H. McGary were members, and at the same time came Ebenezer Brandon, single, also George Hoisington, brother of Earle Hoisington, the two brothers settling with their families at the location previously selected by Earle. They came from Wooster, Ohio. Irvin Shrewsbury settled on land adjoining the Hoisingtons. John R. McGary settled north of Moffat's on road opened by J. D. Young and Ebenezer Brandon settled on land near McGary's. John Williams settled on land adjoining Moffat's. Some time later Moses Brandon father of Ebenezer Brandon and father-in-law of John Williams, settled on land adjoining that of his son-in-law and Job Moffat.

Moses Brandon brought his family with him to Minnesota amongst whom were Robert, Thomas and Jesse. Also William Cox and wife settled on land where Armstrong station is now located.

In the fall of 1855 William Lewis settled on tract on which Armstrong station is located where in the course of a month he died, which was the first death within the township and the first grave in the cemetery at Armstrong.

In September, 1855, Harvey, the son of John Williams was born, being the first white child born between Lake Minnetonka and the forks of Crow River.

EXPLANATION.

The writer wishes to correct an inadvertance which crept into the "Historical Facts" appearing in the GAZETTE of January 29, in regard to John Maxwell, where it states that John Maxwell "served under the Duke of Wellington, taking an active part in the battles of Badajoz, Salamanca and Waterloo and was of the veterans who on the defeat of Napoleon were sent to America in the war of 1812, serving under Packenham at New Orleans." On enquiring more definitely of his son, James Maxwell, the writer learns that John Maxwell was not in the battle of Waterloo, with that exception the statement is substantially correct. He was one of Wellington's veterans who served at Badajoz and Salamanca in the Peninsular campaign, serving in that part of Wellington's army commanded by Pakenham, which commander and command on the cessation of hostilities following the success of Wellington's and combined armies of Europe over Napoleon Bonaparte and the abdication of the latter as a sovereign of France and his retirement to Elba, was sent against the Americans in the war of 1812, and was defeated at New Orleans, Jan. 8, 1815, John Maxwell serving under Pakenham in his campaign against America, especially in the battle of New Orleans.

WOMAN'S COLUMN.

For God and Home and Humanity

EDITED BY MRS. E. A. STACY.

Gov. Burleigh, of Maine, on Prohibition.

I regard the liquor traffic as one of the worst,—in view of the evils that follow in its train,—the worst of all crimes. It destroys manhood, it breaks up families, it fills our jails and State prisons with criminals of every grade. It is the foe of progress, of industry, and of Christian civilization. The victim of the drink habit is more than his own enemy, he is a menace to society. Because of this it becomes the duty of the law to take the traffic that endangers his citizenship in hand, and deal with it in the most effective manner possible. Certainly this cannot be done by giving it the dignity of the public sanction, and placing it upon the same footing with honorable and legitimate commerce.

I do not claim nor do I think, there is any temperance man or woman in Maine who will claim, that the sale and consumption of liquor can be wholly supressed by constitutional law, however vigorously it may be enforced. Such an assumption would be expecting more for prohibition than ever has been or probably ever will be accomplished by any law for the prevention of crime. I do believe, however, that under the wise laws that have been enacted in Maine for the suppression of the liquor traffic, the use of intoxicating liquor was vastly decreased. It is no longer a leading article of commerce at every grocery-store; it is no longer included in the hospitalities of every kind of social event from a corn husking to a grand ball. It is no longer a reputable and legitimate article of trade.

To-day one can walk the streets of any Maine city or village without seeing a single shop window filled with inducements to invite and tempt our young men to ruin. The traffic that once flaunted itself in the public gaze has been driven into dark corners. Popular sentiment and constitutional law are alike arrayed against it. It is carried on by stealth in fear and in secret, behind barred doors, and with every device that ingenuity can invent to avoid the vigilance of the officers charged with the enforcement of the law.

I tell you, my friends that of all the great moral movements that I have witnessed in our good old State, which has ever been in the van of such movements in this country, I have seen none that has accomplished such mighty results in the past, or that gives such bright promise of still greater achievements in the future, as that which has been carried on against the liquor traffic.

To-day one of the most celebrated of all our splendid summer resorts is noted all over this country for the pure spring water it supplies its guests. It has never run a bar nor supplied liquor to its guests, yet for some years past it has been crowded during the season with distinguished people from all over the country, and so great has been its popularity that hundreds have annually been turned away for lack of accomodations, and the proprietors have vastly enlarged their house, contemplate the construction of a still larger addition before the opening of another season, in order to keep pace with the demands upon their hospitality. What greater proof is necessary to show that the summer resort in this State is no way dependent upon the liquor traffic?

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, Feb. 8, 1892.

Secretary Blaine and Mr. Harrison have, according to current gossip patched up their recent very serious differences and renewed the compact concerning the republican nomination, i. e., that the name of only one of them should be presented to the Minneapolis convention. Mr. Harrison took the first step towards making friends when he learned from a mutual friend that Mr. Blaine had said that whatever his personal preferences might be, he was perfectly satisfied that it would kill him to go through another campaign as a Presidential candidate; he knew that believing this Mr. Blaine would not be a candidate, and he wished to make friends, even if it was necessary to swallow a little of his dignity to do so, before the wily man from Maine should take up some other candidate.

The mutual denial of Senator Voorhees, corroborated by the republican Senators from Pennsylvania, was not needed to convince anyone of the untruthfulness of the silly statement alleging that a bargain has been made between the Indiana and Pennsylvania Senators to exchange votes against the confirmation of Judge Dallas of Pennsylvania, for votes against the confirmation of Judge Woods of Indiana. The Indiana Senators opposed the confirmation of Woods because they believed him unfit for a judical position, and not because he was a republican, and all of them favored the confirmation of Judge Dallas, not because he is a democrat but because of his fitness for the position.

Ex-President Cleveland passed through Washington this week, enroute to New York. His train only stopped for a few minutes, and he did not leave his car.

In answer to a resolution of the house asking for information Mr. Wanamaker has submitted his estimate of the probable deficit in the postal revenues for the fiscal year beginning the first of next July, should letter postage be reduced to one cent and postal cards to one half cent each. He says the deficit would be $25,000,000; but admits that the probable increase in the number of letters would reduce that amount considerably. Not a few of the longest-headed democrats in the House are of the opinion that it would be good politics as well as an act of justice to grant the people this boon, which was promised by the last republican National convention, but refused by the republican Congress, which spent all of its time legislating for the favored classes.

Representative McCreary, of Kentucky, is entitled to the thanks of the people for introducing the amendment to the House rules, which was promptly adopted by the House, which compels the several committees having them in charge to report all of the general appropriation bills to the House within eighty days after the committees are announced at the long session, and forty days after the beginning of the short session. This makes it certain that the appropriation bills will all be reported by the middle of March, which will give the House plenty of time to carefully consider each and every item in every one of them.

The House Committee on Ways and Means has, in pursuance of its adopted policy of reporting a number of separate tariff bills, referred the subjects of binding twine, cotton ties, salt, lumber, wood and tin-plate to subcommittees, with instructions to prepare and report to the full committee bills dealing with each of the articles mentioned at as early a date as possible. As soon as the bills are approved by the democrats of the full committee, they will be one at a time, reported to the House.

Representative Enloe's bill to repeal the ocean mail subsidy act of the last Congress, will be favorably reported to the House in a few days, the democratic members of the Postoffice Committee having by an unanimous vote so decided.

The House Judiciary committee has decided to favorably report a very important bill, that providing that a corporation shall be held to be a citizen for all judicial purposes of the State in which it may carry on its business. The big corporations will oppose this measure.

Now that the House has adopted its rules some of those who have had so much to say about its doing nothing will probably soon be complaining of its doing entirely too much. As a matter of fact, the members of the House have done a great deal of hard work, necessarily of a preleminary nature, studying up the various appropriation bills, etc. No actual legislation of importance could take place until the rules were adopted.

The democratic caucus called for tonight to consider the silver question will not be held, it being deemed best not to hold it at present.

World's Fair Notes.

Director-General Davis has declared that all applications for space ought to be presented by July 1, 1892.

Herr Wermuth, the Imperial German World's Fair Commissioner, has already received nearly 2,000 applications for space from the intending exhibitors of his country.

A practical, working business college, which is purely an American institution will be one of the exhibits at the Fair.

It is announced that the imperial and of Emperor William of Germany will attend the Exposition, having already obtained permission to do so.

A consignment of exhibits for the exposition—the first received from a foreign country—arrived at Chicago Jan. 26, from Japan.

It is reported that it is the intention of the Government to establish at the Exposition grounds a complete post office, equal in capacity to that required by a city of 200,000 or more inhabitants, and to operate it, not only during the Fair but for several months previous to the opening and after the closing. A government post office inspector is now on the grounds perfecting plans and estimates. It is believed, that the number of exhibitors will be between 150,000 and 175,000. To these mail will be delivered hourly. Mails sorted on the mail cars, will be dropped at the grounds whenever possible. At a rough estimate, this Exposition post office will require about 300 employes and entail an expense of about $250,000 on the part of the Government.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—

Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—

DEMOCRATIC CALL.

Tuesday, June 21, Officially Named for the Convention.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—The Democratic national convention today issued the following call:

The national Democratic committee, at a meeting held this day, in the city of Washington, D. C., has appointed Tuesday, the 21st day of June, 1892, as the time and chosen the city of Chicago as the place for holding the national Democratic convention. Each state is entitled to a representation therein equal to double the number of representation to which it is entitled in the next electoral college, and each territory and the District of Columbia shall have two delegates. All Democratic conservatives, citizens of the United States, irrespective of past political associations and differences, who can unite with us in the effort for pure, economical and constitutional government are cordially invited to join us in sending delegates to the convention.

CALVIN S. BRICE, Chairman.
SIMON P. SHEERIN Secretary.

JOHN J. KNOX Father of the National Banking System is dead.

ENGLAND'S greatest preacher, Spurgeon, has passed unto his reward.

EDITOR Pease of Anoka was elected on Thursday, President of the Editorial Association.

THE new members of the state board of Health are Dr. Charles F Mc Comb, of Duluth, and Dr. W. J. Mayo, of Rochester.

FROM the Litchfield news Ledger we learn that John Stark, of Acton and others in Meeker county have found hard coal of good quality at a depth of 19 feet. A fine thing for that County.

FOR Blaine's letter of declination; for an account of the burning of Hotel Royal, New York; and Ex-Governor Thayer's letter to Governor Boyd, of Nebraska, see second page of this paper.

WALTER H. SANBORN, of St. Paul, has been appointed judge of the eighth judicial district, which includes Arkansas, Colorado, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wyoming, Indian Territory, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Utah.

The Political Outlook.

Since the withdrawal by James G. Blaine by a very short letter to Chairman Clarkson, of the National Republican Committee, of his name from the contest for nomination to be held at Minneapolis, in June it looks more as if Harrison might lead the Republican ticket in the next campaign. Blaine evidently is to be counted out, as, from reports of those having visited him, Capt. Snider among them, he is physically unable to think of entering the race. In case the Blaine forces cannot concentrate on Harrison some dark horse will loom up, probably there will be no lack of dark horses as the Blaine boom has been so strong and hung on so long as to give a good opportunity for such.

Among the Democratic aspirants Grover Cleveland is still in the lead with the masses, with Hill strong in New York. In case it is found that the Democratic ship is safe without New York, Grover will doubtless be the candidate. In case it figures out that New York must be Democratic in order to elect the Democratic President, some other man, probably Carlisle, will stand a good chance of being the Democratic nominee. Hill, it must be admitted is something of a rustler but the majority of western people would prefer a longer and better acquaintance than they have, before nominating him for so exalted a position. Gordon, of Georgia, has some following, Palmer, of Illinois, Boies, of Iowa, Russell, of Massachusetts, and others could be persuaded to take their chances. Good Democratic timber is not so scarce as to tie the party up to one, or even two men, from which to choose the candidate for President.

Ignatius Donnelly, in this section, seems to be the Alliance, or People's party candidate for the position.

Joseph Cook, of Boston, leads for the Prohibition ticket.

Belva Lockwood will, as usual of course be a candidate.

Why I Am A Democrat.

DEMOCRACY, a government by the people.

DEMOCRAT, an adherent to Democracy.

DEMOCRATIC, relating to a popular government.

First, would say am a Democrat not because my father and my grandfather was but have been and am a Democrat from principle and honest conviction. Am a Democrat because this nation was born and cradled in Democracy and the principles upon which this government was founded was pure, Democratic principles, framed by Jefferson, Adams and others of like precious faith. More than a century has elapsed since the formation of this government and the establishment of our free institutions and yet the present generation may have left the teachings and traditions of our Revolutionary fathers somewhat, yet the principles and the government they fought to establish should be dear to hearts of every American citizen.

Am a Democrat because Democrat principles guarantee to every American citizen equal rights and privileges. Pure Democratic principles do not defile the body nor enslave the poor that they may become servants to the rich but gives every American citizen the right to build for himself a fortune and a name that will go down to posterity, honored by generations yet unborn.

Am a Democrat because Democratic principles are in favor of the poor, the needy and the destitute. It gives encouragement to the toiling masses, it brightens the prospect of the hardy pioneer and causes the heart of the whistling plow-boy to rejoice. Were not the constitution of the United States and the declaration of American independence conceived and brought forth from under the pen of men who foreknew that a government built and established upon the Democratic principles they brought forth would stand and stand forever. No sculptor's chisel could erase it, neither could the mask of time deface it.

Am a Democrat because that party beleives in an administration, pure and simple and one that divides its interest equally with the masses and favors no class legislation.

Am a Democrat because we find it was under Democratic rule that our National debt was reduced to its lowest minimum amounting to only $39,513. The Democrats believe in hard money as a basis and not a spurious substance.

Am a Democrat because that party is in favor of only enough duty on imports to defray the expenses of the government, believing that a high protective tariff is no benefit to the producing class.

Am a Democrat because we believe if whisky is sold at all it should be sold upon its own merits and not under the cover of a license making the state and nation accessary to the crime.

Am a Democrat because that party favors that industry, making dairy butter instead of oleomargerine.

Am a Democrat because that party has hung on to the heels of the Republican party for thirty years or more and kept them from running headlong into the middle of the ocean with the United States treasury and all, same as did the swine which the devil entered into them. The Democrat party is in favor of giving cheap and wholesome food to the deserving poor and substantial woolen goods in place of shoddy.

Am a Democrat because true Democratic principles compels him, when his country is invaded by the enemy to fight for his home and fireside and the flag of his country. True Democracy favors free thought, free speech and free pres and allows all her subjects to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience.

Am a Democrat because its principles are broad and far reaching. It protects the peasant as well as the merchant, the hodcarrier as well as the banker and protects the farmer as well as the millionaire. It fosters love for the poor and needy and in time of pestilence, famine or disease, Democracy is the vanguard that first enters the home of the destitute, administering to their wants and necessities. It engenders peace, not strife, it brings prosperity, not adversity, it brings liberty, not slavery and above all Democratic principles are necessary for the upbuilding of a healthy and prosperous government where all mankind may enjoy equal rights and privileges being the slaves and servants of none.

These are a few of the reasons why I am a Democrat. There might be many more added but time and opportunity will not admit at present.

Hoping the political campaign of '92 will be a healthy and prosperous one to the Prohibition party I remain yours truly until after next November election.

d. H. McCray.

MEDINA—1855.

While the English speaking people were settling the country about Long Lake, Lake Minnetonka and westward, the Germans were flanking them on the north, extending their settlement which has been previously mentioned as beginning in 1854, through the town of Medina during the year 1855, in about the following order as to names and locations beginning in the spring of the latter year, namely: George Reiser, John Merz, Leo Stumpf, Andrew Scherer, John Wolfield and Anthon Baumeister, with their families, also Adam Scherer and Peter Behrns, single.

John Wolfield settled on the north end of the Lake known by his name where in July 1852 he was found by old neighbors of his former home in Trier, Germany, namely: Bernard Gaspar, Matthias Miller and wife and three sons; Peter, Edward and Nicholas Miller and also by Nicholas Classen, Wolfield having opened a road from that of a previous settler, perhaps that of Reiser or Merz, by which his old neighbors found him and they. Gasper, Miller and his sons and Classen in turn opened roads to locations selected by them, other German settlers continuing this process of opening roads to their respective locations, all being extentions of that route, opened from Garrison's road east of Wayzata by Joseph Wilson's, Fred'k Rahnts' and Matthias Hansman's, over which the German settlers of 1855 found their way into Medina. Following the settlers last mentioned others came namely: Jacob Engel, John P. Bourgevies, Wm. Blakeman, Matthias Schwalen, and John Schwalen (son of Matthias) Jacob Baecker, Paul Weydert, William Blakeman, William F. Hillman and family, John Beck, Peter Hopple, Philip Klein, Philip Lerch, Peter Lerch, Peter Schmitz and others.

Samuel Moody and Needham T. Perkins, Joseph B. and Wyman Macomber, Americans, settled in that part of Medina lying South of Lake Independence, during the fall of 1855, Perkins settling on the south shore of the Lake and on the west line of Medina adjoining the claim of his brother John B. in Independence Township where the two brothers later commenced business enterprises, which subsequently developed into a village. They had in their employ one Nollford Alford, a quadroon.

INDEPENDENCE—1855.

In the spring of 1855 Job Moffat returned from the east (Indiana) with his family, taking them to the habitation on Pioneer Creek erected by him the previous fall. Others settled in the vicinity of Pioneer Creek and in the town of Independence during the spring and summer of 1855, namely: John Williams, Irvin Shrewsbury and John R. McGary and their families, of the latter, Ennis and John H. McGary were members, and at the same time came Ebenezer Brandon, single, also George Hoisington, brother of Earle Hoisington, the two brothers settling with their families at the location previously selected by Earle. They came from Wooster, Ohio. Irvin Shrewsbury settled on land adjoining the Hoisingtons, John R. McGary settled north of Moffat's on road opened by J. D. Young and Ebenezer Brandon settled on land near McGary's. John Williams settled on land adjoining Moffat's. Some time later Moses Brandon father of Ebenezer Brandon and father-in-law of John Williams, settled on land adjoining that of his son-in-law and Job Moffat.

Moses Brandon brought his family with him to Minnesota amongst whom were Robert, Thomas and Jesse. Also William Cox and wife settled on land where Armstrong station is now located.

In the fall of 1855 William Lewis settled on tract on which Armstrong station is located where in the course of a month he died, which was the first death within the township and the first grave in the cemetery at Armstrong.

In September, 1855, Harvey, the son of John Williams was born, being the first white child born between Lake Minnetonka and the forks of Crow River.

EXPLANATION.

The writer wishes to correct an inadvertance which crept into the "Historical Facts" appearing in the GAZETTE of January 29, in regard to John Maxwell, where it states that John Maxwell "served under the Duke of Wellington, taking an active part in the battles of Badajoz, Salamanca and Waterloo and was of the veterans who on the defeat of Napoleon were sent to America in the war of 1812, serving under Packenham at New Orleans." On enquiring more definitely of his son, James Maxwell, the writer learns that John Maxwell was not in the battle of Waterloo, with that exception the statement is substantially correct. He was one of Wellington's veterans who served at Badajoz and Salamanca in the Peninsular campaign, serving in that part of Wellington's army commanded by Pakenham, which commander and command on the cessation of hostilities following the success of Wellington's and combined armies of Europe over Napoleon Bonaparte and the abdication of the latter as a sovereign of France and his retirement to Elba, was sent against the Americans in the war of 1812, and was defeated at New Orleans, Jan. 8, 1815. John Maxwell serving under Pakenham in his campaign against America, especially in the battle of New Orleans.

WOMAN'S COLUMN.

For God and Home and Humanity

EDITED BY MRS. E. A. STACY.

Gov. Burleigh, of Maine, on Prohibition.

I regard the liquor traffic as one of the worst,—in view of the evils that follow in its train,—the worst of all crimes. It destroys manhood, it breaks up families, it fills our jails and State prisons with criminals of every grade. It is the foe of progress, of industry, and of Christian civilization. The victim of the drink habit is more than his own enemy, he is a menace to society. Because of this it becomes the duty of the law to take the traffic that endangers his citizenship in hand, and deal with it in the most effective manner possible. Certainly this cannot be done by giving it the dignity of the public sanction, and placing it upon the same footing with honorable and legitimate commerce.

I do not claim nor do I think, there is any temperance man or woman in Maine who will claim, that the sale and consumption of liquor can be wholly supressed by constitutional law, however vigorously it may be enforced. Such an assumption would be expecting more for prohibition than ever has been or probably ever will be accomplished by any law for the prevention of crime. I do believe, however, that under the wise laws that have been enacted in Maine for the suppression of the liquor traffic, the use of intoxicating liquor was vastly decreased. It is no longer a leading article of commerce at every grocery-store; it is no longer included in the hospitalities of every kind of social event from a corn husking to a grand ball. It is no longer a reputable and legitimate article of trade.

To-day one can walk the streets of any Maine city or village without seeing a single shop window filled with intoxicants to invite and tempt our young men to ruin. The traffic that once flaunted itself in the public gaze has been driven into dark corners. Popular sentiment and constitutional law are alike arrayed against it. It is carried on by stealth in fear and in secret behind barred doors, and with every device that ingenuity can invent to avoid the vigilance of the officers charged with the enforcement of the law.

I tell you, my friends that of all the great moral movements that I have witnessed in our good old State, which has ever been in the van of such movements in this country, I have seen none that has accomplished such mighty results in the past, or that gives such bright promise of still greater achievements in the future, as that which has been carried on against the liquor traffic.

Today one of the most celebrated of all our splendid summer resorts is noted all over this country for the pure spring water it supplies its guests. It has never run a bar nor supplied liquor to its guests, yet for some years past it has been crowded during the season with distinguished people from all over the country, and so great has been its popularity that hundreds have annually been turned away for lack of accomodations, and the proprietors have vastly enlarged their house, contemplate the construction of a still larger addition before the opening of another season, in order to keep pace with the demands upon their hospitality. What greater proof is necessary to show that the summer resort in this State is no way dependent upon the liquor traffic?

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, Feb. 8, 1892.

Secretary Blaine and Mr. Harrison have, according to current gossip patched up their recent very serious differences and renewed the compact concerning the republican nomination, i. e., that the name of only one of them should be presented to the Minneapolis convention. Mr. Harrison took the first step towards making friends when he learned from a mutual friend that Mr. Blaine had said that whatever his personal preferences might be, he was perfectly satisfied that it would kill him to go through another campaign as a Presidential candidate; he knew that believing this Mr. Blaine would not be a candidate, and he wished to make friends, even if it was necessary to swallow a little of his dignity to do so, before the wily man from Maine should take up some other candidate.

The timely denial of Senator Voorhees, corroborated by the republican Senators from Pennsylvania, was not needed to convince anyone of the untruthfulness of the silly statement alleging that a bargain has been made between the Indiana and Pennsylvania Senators to exchange votes against the confirmation of Judge Dallas of Pennsylvania, for votes against the confirmation of Judge Woods of Indiana. The Indiana Senators opposed the confirmation of Woods because they believed him unfit for a judical position, and not because he was a republican, and all of them favored the confirmation of Judge Dallas, not because he is a democrat but because of his fitness for the position.

Ex-President Cleveland passed through Washington this week, enroute to New York. His train only stopped for a few minutes, and he did not leave his car.

In answer to a resolution of the house asking for information Mr. Wanamaker has submitted his estimate of the probable deficit in the postal revenues for the fiscal year beginning the first of next July, should letter postage be reduced to one cent and postal cards to one half cent each. He says the deficit would be $25,000 000; but admits that the probable increase in the number of letters would reduce that amount considerably. Not a few of the longest-headed democrats in the House are of the opinion that it would be good politics as well as an act of justice to grant the people this boon, which was promised by the last republican National convention, but refused by the republican Congress, which spent all of its time legislating for the favored classes.

Representative McCreary, of Kentucky, is entitled to the thanks of the people for introducing the amendment to the House rules, which was promptly adopted by the House, which compels the several committees having them in charge to report all of the general appropriation bills to the House within eighty days after the committees are announced at the long session, and forty days after the beginning of the short session. This makes it certain that the appropriation bills will all be reported by the middle of March, which will give the House plenty of time to carefully consider each and every item in every one of them.

The House Committee on Ways and Means has, in pursuance of its adopted policy of reporting a number of separate tariff bills, referred the subjects of binding twine, cotton ties, salt, lumber, wool and tin-plate to subcommittees, with instructions to prepare and report to the full committee bills dealing with each of the articles mentioned at as early a date as possible. As soon as the bills are approved by the democrats of the full committee, they will be one at a time, reported to the House.

Representative Enloe's bill to repeal the ocean mail subsidy act of the last Congress, will be favorably reported to the House in a few days, the democratic members of the Postoffice Committee having by an unanimous vote so decided.

The House Judiciary committee has decided to favorably report a very important bill, that providing that a corporation shall be held to be a citizen for all judicial purposes of the State in which it may carry on its business. The big corporations will oppose this measure.

Now that the House has adopted its rules some of those who have had so much to say about its doing nothing will probably soon be complaining of its doing entirely too much. As a matter of fact, the members of the House have done a great deal of hard work, necessarily of a preleminary nature, studying up the various appropriation bills, etc. No actual legislation of importance could take place until the rules were adopted.

The democratic caucus called for tonight to consider the silver question will not be held, it being deemed best not to hold it at present.

World's Fair Notes.

Director-General Davis has declared that all applications for space ought to be presented by July 1, 1892.

Herr Wermuth, the Imperial German Worlds Fair Commissioner, has already received nearly 2,000 applications for space from the intending exhibitors of his country.

A practical, working business college, which is purely an American institution will be one of the exhibits at the Fair.

It is announced that the imperial and of Emperor William of Germany will attend the Exposition, having already obtained permission to do so.

A consignment of exhibits for the exposition—the first received from a foreign country—arrived at Chicago Jan. 26, from Japan.

It is reported that it is the intention of the Government to establish at the Exposition grounds a complete post office, equal in capacity to that required by a city of 200,000 or more inhabitants, and to operate it, not only during the Fair but for several months previous to the opening and after the closing. A government post office inspector is now on the grounds perfecting plans and estimates. It is believed, that the number of exhibitors will be between 150,000 and 175,000. To these mail will be delivered hourly. Mails sorted on the mail cars, will be dropped at the grounds whenever possible. At a rough estimate, this Exposition post office will require about 300 employes and entail an expense of about $250,000 on the part of the Government.

MME. PATTI and the American dollar have again fallen in love with each other. And as it is leap year, Mme. Patti may be relied upon to elope with the dollar.

EDISON said, recently: "So far as the patents themselves go, I have stood an actual loss in experimenting and in lawsuits of $600,000. I should be better off if I had not taken out any patents."

THE new cable between New York and the Bahama islands has been completed and the first message from the Bahamas was received and delivered in thirty-five minutes in New York.

T. THOMAS FORTUNE, the colored orator and editor, is about to issue a novel with the title of "A Man Without a Race." It probably refers to some man who has been elected without opposition.

THOSE who desire joining "a Polar expedition party" should always wait and join "the relief expedition," which is invariably sent out to hunt the party of the first part. "The relief" has the most fun.

FRANCIS M. DALE, a colored man, took oath in Judge Broaddus' court in Kansas City, Mo., that he was 170 years old and had fought under Washington in the Revolutionary war. The old chap would swear to anything.

MRS. LYNDA A. DENT is the first woman to be admitted to the bar in Florida. The code of ethics excluding women from the profession was almost an ironclad one, but she not only made a dent in it but went in with it.

CHRISTINE NILSSON'S return to her native country of Sweden as wife of the Spanish ambassador, the Count de la Casa Miranda, rounds out well her romance of real life. She was a farmer's child on the hills when her gift of song was discovered, and after a most fortunate life as queen of song on two continents she returns in the rank of a grandee of Spain.

PATTI saw Niagara in its winter garb a few days ago and grew quite enthusiastic over its beauties. "O, what a brilliant scene that would make! I feel just like shouting," impulsively exclaimed Patti. But the fear that some one might hear her wonderful voice without paying for it speedily quenched her enthusiasm and the disposition to shout was suppressed.

THE young men of the country appear to be very uneasy lest they should be married in spite of themselves this year. A large number of the girls are not earning salaries that would justify them in taking a husband to support, and most of those who are in receipt of a comfortable income prefer the life of independence which it brings to the responsibilities of marriage. Really, if he only knew it, the average young man has not the slightest cause for alarm.

THE late John Sharp was the last of the old Mormon leaders and had been a resident of Utah forty years. Scotland was his native land, and he worked for years in the coal mines of that country. After joining Brigham Young's society he became a director or stockholder in many Mormon enterprises. Of the Deseret bank he was president, and even of the Union Pacific he was a director. In the church he was a bishop. His wives were three in number and his family was large.

THE people of Paris consumed within the last year 21,291 horses, 239 donkeys and forty mules, the meat weighing, according to the returns, 4,615 tons. At the 180 shops and stalls where such food is sold the price has varied from 2 sous to 1 franc a pound, the latter being the price of the best horse steaks. Only about one-third of the meat is sold fresh and undisguised; the rest is used in making sausages, 402 horses having been seized and condemned as unfit for food before being turned into sausage.

THE following is given as a reliable formula for invisible ink, which can be made at a cost of about one dollar a barrel. Dissolve in pure water as much common baking soda as will dissolve. This is your ink. Write on clear white paper with a clean pen. No trace of the writing will be visible after it is dry. To bring the writing out dip the paper into clear water. After the paper has dried the writing will again disappear, but may be brought out as before at any time by redipping in clear water.

ANOTHER inventor has come to the front with an invention which he believes will rival even those of Edison and bring to mankind generally a degree of benefit which will be in direct inverse proportion to the woe inflicted upon the individuals commonly known as the coal barons. What Albert Edelmann has to offer is no less than a scheme to manufacture a coal at one dollar a ton which will be superior in its results to either bituminous or anthracite coal. Besides the exceeding cheapness of the new article, Mr. Edelmann claims for it the merit of being absolutely odorless and smokeless.

NATURE has dealt bountifully with the Canadians this year. The grain yield in Ontario, according to the bureau of industry, has been unusually large. The fall and spring wheat crop is estimated at 38,584,026 bushels, nearly one-half larger than for 1890. The oat crop exceeds by 22,000,000 bushels last year's light crop, and the average prairie crop is the highest in ten years. One hundred and forty thousand fewer acres were sown in barley than last year, but the yield is 541,737 bushels more. The root crops are described as enormous. Fall wheat has averaged 25 to 30 bushels an acre in many sections.

THE census figures show that a total of 1,001,297 acres of land in the arid regions of the United States were under irrigation in the last census year. The acreage was as follows: Arizona, 65,821; New Mexico, 91,745; Utah, 263,473; Wyoming, 229,676, and Montana, 350,582. Irrigation must be depended upon to supply the cereal food of the future. It will not only bring under cultivation untold millions of acres of land hitherto deemed worthless, but will be applied to a doubling of production in a large part of the area now devoted to agriculture. Plenty of water and sunshine is all that is needed.

HEMMED IN BY FLAMES.

Guests of the Hotel Royal in New York City Awakened to Find the Building in a Blaze—Many Persons Perish—Five Dead Bodies Recovered and Scores Are Missing.

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—The Hotel Royal, that well-known landmark which has stood for more than a quarter of a century at the southeast corner of Sixth avenue and Fortieth street, was burned to the ground early Sunday morning and a large number of people were burned, suffocated and crushed in the ruins. At the time of the disaster there were nearly 150 guests in the house. The hotel employes, all told, number fifty-five. Of this number of people five have thus far been found dead, six are in the hospital and sixty-three have been reported alive.

It is feared that a search of the vast, smoking pile of debris in the cellar of the hotel will reveal many ghastly finds. It was reported at a late hour that no less than 100 people were still unaccounted for. Soon after the fire broke out ambulances arrived from the various hospitals. Many physicians whose residences are in the neighborhood were quickly on the scene and did all they could to relieve the injured.

Of the dead, only one body has been identified—that of Harry C. Levy, of the firm of Levy, Strauss & Freeman, wholesale clothiers at 707 Broadway. Of the other four two are women and two men. The injured, so far as known are:

Clarence W. Klein, 39 years old, single, lawyer, Hazleton, Pa., partially suffocated and burned, injuries not fatal, taken to Bellevue hospital; Walter L. Yates, 60 years old, clothier of Philadelphia, condition serious, burns and contusions; Mrs. Isabella Mears, wife of the proprietor, injuries not serious, will recover, taken to Bellevue hospital; Herbert Harding, engineer of the Hotel Royal, fatally burned while trying to rescue a woman, several ribs broken, taken to hospital.

The scenes at the fire before the fire companies arrived were heartrending. One man whose name is not known sprang from a third-story window and was dashed to death on the ground below. This was on the Sixth avenue side of the building. A moment later another man leaped from a window on the Fortieth street side and was instantly killed. Shortly afterward two women jumped from windows on the Sixth avenue side and were dead when picked up. The bodies were taken to the Thirtieth street station house, and afterward, unidentified, removed to the morgue.

When the walls fell people were seen at several windows on the top floor crying for help, but they fell back and were soon buried in the ruins. The flames of the burning building illumined the sky for miles around and drew to the scene—which during the entire day was an object of curiosity—an immense throng of people.

After the fire had sufficiently cooled to permit a partial examination of the ruins a search was made for the dead. The search was at once rewarded by the finding of a charred body almost burned to a crisp. It was almost unrecognizable, but was identified as that of Henry J. Levy from a ring on one of the fingers. The walls were in a dangerous condition and it was deemed necessary to pull them down before continuing the search for the dead. A force of 100 men will be put to work at once clearing away the debris.

The loss on the hotel property is estimated at $250,000. The building was owned by Hyman Israel, furniture dealer on the Bowery. The Hotel Royal was built more than twenty-five years ago. It was formerly kept by Messrs. Peris & Butler, but Mr. Meares leased it thirteen years ago. In 1882 the building was remodeled and an addition was made on the south side. The house was the home of many persons in the theatrical profession and was patronized chiefly by transients for a night.

The guest who probably had the most narrow and at the same time most marvelous escape was M. L. Harman, a traveling salesman for a St. Louis wholesale grocery house. He resistered at the hotel on Saturday evening with his wife. He said:

"I had a room on the fifth floor, and was aroused from sleep by a loud crackling noise and by the sound of a whistle which I think was from one of the engines on the elevated road. I opened my door and discovered that the stairway leading to the lower floors was in a blaze. The hall was filled with smoke, and as it poured into my room as long as the door was open I quickly closed it, knowing that there was no escape that way. I then went to the window and opened it and there seemed to be as much smoke on the outside as there was in the hallway, for the room soon filled with smoke from that direction.

"Both my wife and I would have suffocated in the room had I not taken two towels which I soaked with water. These we used to keep the smoke out of our lungs by holding them over our mouths and nostrils. I tried to find a fire escape near our window, but there was none, and I thought at one time that we should never get out of the room alive.

"It was certain death to jump five stories and as it was either that or burn to death I said to my wife; 'Mattie, I am going to shoot you and then kill myself.' I concluded that it would be better to die that way than burn to death, and as I always sleep with a revolver under my pillow I hurried to the bed to get it. By this time the flames were coming up through the cracks of the floor and through the cracks of the door.

"Just as I was about to shoot my wife the floor fell with a crash and we went down probably two stories. The flooring stopped opposite a window and my wife jumped out and landed on the portico beneath. A rope was hanging out of this window, and with this assistance I managed to get down another story, but here I slipped and fell to the portico beside my wife. I picked her up, but was unable to carry her, and was almost suffocated and the fall had injured me. I was endeavoring to reach a ladder to carry her down to the street, when two firemen took her from me. How I reached the street I do not know."

NOT A CANDIDATE.

Secretary Blaine Writes a Letter Declining to Allow His Name to Be Brought Before the National Republican Convention.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—Mr. Blaine is not a candidate for the presidency. He makes this official announcement in the following letter to Chairman Clarkson of the republican national committee:

"WASHINGTON, Feb. 6, 1892.—Hon. J. S. Clarkson, Chairman of the Republican National Committee—Dear Sir: I am not a candidate for the presidency and my name will not go before the republican national convention for the nomination. I make this announcement in due season.

"To those who have tendered me their support I owe sincere thanks and am most grateful for their confidence. They will, I am sure, make earnest effort in the approaching contest, which is rendered especially important by reason of the industrial and financial policies of the government being at stake. The popular decision on these issues is of great moment and will be of far-reaching consequences. Very sincerely yours, JAMES G. BLAINE."

The fact that the letter was coming has been known in Washington for several days, and has been imparted confidentially to a number of gentlemen who think they are candidates. Mr. Blaine has told his friends that they should know his intentions in time, and his announcement that his name will not go before the convention gives them ample notice. They are free to choose for themselves.

That a regard for his health has something to do with Mr. Blaine's decision is not unlikely. At present he is in excellent health, and his doctors assure him that he has no chronic trouble to fear. But he is not willing to undergo all the fatigues and excitement of a presidential campaign when he finds it necessary now to husband his strength. It is also said that it is the wish of Mrs. Blaine and the secretary's family that he refrain from a renewal of the strain which was so great in 1884. It is true that the old malignant fight could not be fought over again, but the strain would be none the less. Since he became secretary of state Mr. Blaine has cared less and less for the powers of the presidential office with its infinite cares in the way of patronage.

If the office could be entirely disassociated from this and given over to public policy he might think more of it, but it has been an admitted relief for him in fulfilling the duties of secretary of state to be able to give his time to the great questions with which that department has to deal. Some time ago in talking to a friend he discussed the situation freely, saying in substance:

"I don't suppose any man who has once sought the office can truthfully say he doesn't care for it. I confess I would like to be president, but I will never risk my health and life in seeking it. The office of secretary of state is a broad enough field for me during the rest of my public career."

The democrats agree with practical unanimity that Blaine not being in it nothing can prevent President Harrison's renomination. The republican congressmen, though keenly regretting Mr. Blaine's declination, are mostly of the same opinion. Some are found who say that there is nothing in the letter to prevent the Minneapolis convention from nominating Mr. Blaine, that he simply says he will not be a candidate, and so on. But this is not the view taken by those who best understand the secretary's mind. They are satified that regard for his health and other considerations have fully determined him and that his candidacy must no longer be thought of by the republicans in electing delegates. In the meantime they expect Mr. Blaine's policy will be shown in shaping the issues of the campaign along the lines of reciprocity in the time between now and the Minneapolis convention.

Secretary Blaine is not accessible to callers. The letter to Chairman Clarkson contains all the views which he thinks it necessary to give to the public at present. His friends are well informed of the causes which led up to the letter, and they themselves have little comment to make except to reiterate their belief that the letter is to be taken as final. That is the impression they have received from their personal intercourse with the secretary. They further say it means another four years of Mr. Blaine at the head of the state department.

HE YIELDS.

Thomas M. Thayer Notifies Gov. Boyd That He Is Ready to Vacate Nebraska's Gubernatorial Chair.

LINCOLN, Neb., Feb. 8.—At noon Sunday Gov. Thayer received a letter from his attorney stating that after a careful consideration of the subject of his retaining the gubernatorial chair of Nebraska he had concluded that it should be surrendered to Gov. Boyd. Gov. Thayer immediately acquiesced, and dictated the following letter to Gov. Boyd:

"STATE OF NEBRASKA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, LINCOLN, Feb. 6, 1892.—Gov. James E. Boyd, Omaha—Sir: When I commenced proceedings one year ago to test your title to the office of governor I did so in the belief that there was great doubt in the public mind as to your citizenship and eligibility. I then took occasion to publicly say that as soon as your citizenship was established by courts I would gladly surrender the office to you. The contest was not one of personal strife, nor to satisfy any ambition of my own, but to comply with and uphold the constitution of the state. Now that the public press has announced that the highest tribunal has declared under the constitution and laws of our country and state your right to the office of governor, without awaiting the mandate of the court, as I am about to leave the state Monday to be absent some weeks, it would be convenient for me to turn over the office to you at 2 o'clock p. m. that day, if it is your pleasure to accept the same at that time. Very respectfully your obedient servant, "JOHN M. THAYER."

A Tenacious Schoolma'am.

The Hoffman (Rice county) school district is up in arms against Miss Seymour, the teacher. Some time ago she had occasion to chastise the son of one of the directors, and expelled him. The next day the boy's father demanded his reinstatement, but she wouldn't reinstate. Another director becoming involved in the trouble, they informed her that her services could be dispensed with. She showed them a contract and coolly said that she still had five weeks of school to teach. Thereupon a suit followed, but Miss Seymour won.

Fooled Her Parents.

Tilda Neumann attended church at Northfield with the rest of the family. Before the services were over she complained of being sick and went home. Her sickness was only feigned and on the way home she met Jacob Clupp and they took a train to Faribault, where they were married. The father of the girl started in hot pursuit, but was ten minutes too late. He had spoiled their wedding on several other occasions.

Peroutka's Creditors Swindled.

Frank Peroutka, a general merchant of Winona, failed. His liabilities were about $30,000 and his assets $25,000. Certain irregularities were the means of arousing the suspicions of Peroutka's creditors and they demanded an examination. O. B. Gould was appointed the referee and the discrepancy discovered was variously estimated at from $10,000 to $19,000. Peroutka had disappeared.

Brick Plant for Minneapolis.

The latest acquisition to the industries of Minneapolis is a huge brickmaking plant which will be put in by the Hydraulic Pressed Brick Company of St. Louis, Mo., as soon as the frost is out of the ground. The plant will cost something like $100,000, and as the company has a capital stock of $3,000,000, it will spare no effort in putting the works into the best possible shape.

Settled the Claims.

The Northern Pacific Railway Company has settled at St. Paul with all the members of the Andrews opera company who were injured in the accident on their road, and with the money thus secured the company expect to reorganize and take the road within three weeks. HE HAD THE GRIP.

MR. E. SCHLICHTING, living at No. 209 Third Ave., New York City, wrote the following under date of Dec. 29th, 1891. Two weeks ago I was taken with severe pains in my back, head, chest and throat, in fact my whole body ached and I concluded it must be the grip. I used two bottles of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup and found relief, the third bottle cured me. Two of my children were taken the same way and two bottles cured them. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is worth its weight in gold.

A REAL VALENTINE.

I sent my love a valentine
O'erwritten with a wish of mine,
Which I had put in tender phrase
By twisting it in many ways.
The rhyme, like others of its kind,
Was all of Cupid painted blind:
The silly things the rascal said
Were meant to turn my sweetheart's head,
And make her think 'twas time to give Encouragement to me to live.

Not long from this an answer came
Signed by that portion of her name
Which I had never dared to speak
Lest I should suffer on the cheek.

Wrote she: "Were I an oculist,
I'd have young Cupid's two eyes kissed;
I'd take the bandage off that he
The object of his love might see;
Then, if he really loves her well,
He'll go to her himself and tell."

I knew just what that message meant;
I donned my coat and hat and went,
And set before her Cupid's woes
In plain and much embarrassed prose;
Wherein she kissed with tenderness
The rascal's eyes and told me
"Yes."
—Life.

IT WAS the thirteenth of February. The sun had come out and made things look very bright and happy, and in the southern country its light was so warm and pleasant that three little girls had come out among the grass and trees to write their valentines. These girls were Seth Granberry's three little states, as they were called.

The two Granberry brothers, Seth and Josiah, were farmers, and their large farms joined. The brothers were twins.

They were married on the same day. There had been a sort of agreement between them that whenever a baby girl came to the household of either, she should be given the name of a state in the union.

So it came about that, when some years had gone by, there were six little states, three in each family. The boys did not count in this union, for it would not do to call a boy Texas or Mississippi.

Then came the time when Seth and Josiah ceased to be twins in spirit, for they had a serious quarrel about the planting of a division stake, and the ownership of three or four feet of land. Seth, the more self-willed of the two, had planted the stake where he pleased, and Joe had submitted; but from that day the brothers had not spoken to each other, and the six little states, who loved each other, had been separated.

Seth's Zouri—whose real name was Missouri—had just declared that she would send a valentine to Uncle Joe.

"I met him down at the branch the other day," she said, "and he talked to me real nice. I felt sorry for him, because he said that Tennessee could never go without crutches any more."

knew that he was somewhere in the fields, looking about his farm and planning the spring sowing.

Every few moments her voice rang out in a loud call: "Poppy, where are you?"

At last, from a distance, she heard the answer: "Halloo! Zouri, is that you? I'm down in the potato field!"

When she reached him he placed her on the highest rail of the fence while he stood beside her and listened. There had always been a strong bond of sympathy between him and this little girl; perhaps because she was a "chip of the old block."

"What's the matter with poppy's little gal?" he asked.

"It's Lous'any and Georgia; they've been bothering me."

Zouri's cheeks were flushed and her eyes bright, and it seemed as if her hair took on a more defiant curl than usual.

Seth looked at her for a moment. Then he took her sunbonnet from her hand and placed it on her head.

"What have they been bothering you about, honey?"

Zouri quietly took her sunbonnet off as she answered: "Because I said I was going to do something you didn't want me to. But I just have to do it, poppy! It would make me feel so bad if I didn't."

Seth's face looked grave. It was a puzzle to him sometimes to know how to deal with Zouri.

"Well, honey," he said, soberly, "did you come 'way out here to get me to let you do a thing after I had told you you couldn't?"

"No, poppy," she said. "I just come to get you to make Georgia and Lous'any let me alone and stop being mean to me."

"Zouri, is it anything bad you want to do?"

"No, it ain't!"

"What is it, honey?"

"I can't tell you; it's a secret."

"Will you t ell poppy sometime?"

"Yes, if you ain't m ean to me like Lous'any and G eorgia."

He was silent. She slipped from the fence and took his hand, and they started together across the fields toward home.

"Zouri, put on your sunbonnet; you'll catch cold."

Zouri obeyed. "Poppy," she said, "what did you and Uncle Joe get angry about? Did he treat you mean when you wanted to do anything?"

Seth started. Joe had been in his mind more than once that day, because it was the anniversary of the planting of the stake, and Seth had stood for half an hour by the side of the stake, recalling the circumstances connected with it.

"No, Zouri; Joe wasn't exactly mean to me. I reckon he was better'n I was, when it comes to that."

"Then I aint going to be mad with him," she answered, and the sunbonnet came off again. "Anyhow, Tennessee's got to go on crutches all her life, an' I'm sorry." For once Zouri was almost crying.

"Is that a fact, Zouri? Little Tenny on crutches—all her life, too! What if it was you, Zouri?"

There was no answer, and they walked home the rest of the way in silence.

St. Valentine's day was clear and beautiful. There was peace between Seth's little states.

Soon after dinner, without a word to anyone, Zouri put on a clean dress, and, hanging her sunbonnet on her arm, started away on her mission.

Seth had been watching her all day.

BOTH CHAIRS WERE FILLED THAT EVENING.

Lous'any and Georgia said they were quite sure that Zouri would be whipped if she did not keep away from Uncle Joe's folks and stop sending valentines there. But Zouri was the youngest of the three, and not old enough to be very cautious; besides, she had a little curly red head and her father's own willful spirit.

She went on, painfully writing the words of her valentine:

"Deer Unker Joe, I luv you I wish you wud cum over an set on the uther side of the chimly like you use to. Pa won't let enybody set there now. Im sorry Tenny has to go on crutches. frum your loving valentine."

"'Tain't right, Zouri," Lous'any said. "Pa'll punish you for it."

"Besides, who'll take it over to Uncle Joe?" asked Georgia.

"I will," said Zouri, as she shook back her red curls and picked up her sunbonnet from the grass.

"'Tain't any use to bother me about it, 'cause I'm going to send it, and I don't care."

Zouri was so young—scarcely eight years old—and so much accustomed to being petted, that such opposition as this hurt her feelings deeply. But it did not shake her resolution.

She had written the valentine that she had meant from the beginning to write. She left Georgia and Louisiana now, and ran, pattering her bare feet over the grass, to the fence that separated the yard from the roadway.

"She's gone to the fields where pa is," Georgia said, as she watched Zouri disappear down the roadway.

"Yes, and what's more," Louisiana answered, "she'll make pa say she can up and do anything she wants to."

They were right in guessing that Zouri had gone to find her fath She He saw her start from home, but he said nothing.

She reached the point where the road crossed the head of the old mill pond. She knew that Uncle Joe's was not far beyond. But Zouri had never been very brave about crossing the pond; there was only a narrow plank-way across, and it seemed so near the water, and so many fishes and noisy frogs and other queer creatures lived right under this plank, and the water looked so quiet and dark.

When Zouri reached this point in her journey she stopped a moment, a little frightened, and was almost ready to turn back and go home. But she did not do this. She began to sing, and as she sang she ran lightly across the plank.

Zouri was on Uncle Joe's farm now, and hoped to find him in some field not far away. As she went along the roadway, looking to the right and left, she saw, on a little rise of land, the figure of a man. He was standing between her and the sinking sun, and a warm, soft light shone over his face.

"Uncle Joe! Oh, Uncle Joe!" she called.

"Land sakes! If that ain't Seth's little Zouri," he muttered, as he started toward her.

"No, don't come yet," she called again. "I ain't ready."

He stopped, and stood waiting.

"What on the earth's brought Zouri over here? I'll bet Seth don't know it! The child's just the apple of Seth's eye. Well, if she can get around him, there's something in her."

"Uncle Joe, are you listening?"

"Yes, honey—talk on."

"Well, I've put it in that old hollow tree down here. When I'm gone, you can go and get it. Good-by, Uncle Joe!"

"Good-by, Zouri. Can't you wait a bit?"

He watched her sunny little figure, the clean, fresh dress, the dangling sunbonnet, and the soft, dancing curls as she flew along toward home again.

"Well, I reckon I'll have to see what it is," he said.

He walked slowly to the edge of the field, vaulted over the rail-fence, and crossed the road to where the old hollow tree stood. He stooped and put his hand within, and then drew it out with a shame-faced air.

"Just one of Zouri's jokes, I reckon. She'll think I'm an old fool to come down here at all."

Then he leaned against the tree with one hand resting on its trunk. "Just four years ago yesterday since Seth and I stopped speaking, and this is the first time one of his family's been on my land, to my knowing. Not another one of 'em would dare to come but Zouri."

He shuffled around again to the hollow. "I reckon I'll try once more," he said.

This time he dropped upon his knees, put his arm far into the opening and felt carefully around. He found it, all crumpled and not very clean. Then he slowly opened and read it—the little scrawl that had cost Zouri so much to write.

It was like a message from Seth, and all the old-time love for his brother came into Joe's heart as he read Zouri's valentine.

"I'm sorry Tenny has to go on crutches." Here was the great sorrow of Joe's life, for Tenny was to him what Zouri was to Seth, and all her young strength had gone, and left her a patient, suffering little cripple.

So he stood there and wept over Zouri's tender words. "God bless her for sending it," he murmured.

As he stood there he heard her calling from far down the road:

"Uncle Joe! Oh, Uncle Joe!"

He turned and saw Zouri running toward him, somewhat pale and frightened. He stooped and held open his arms, and she rushed into them. Then he kissed her silently.

"I was afraid to cross the plank at the pond," she said.

"Never mind, Zouri," he said, "I'll take you over the pond."

He held her gently in his arms and carried her as easily as if she had been a baby.

"Did you get it, Uncle Joe?" she whispered.

"Yes, honey, it was the best little letter that ever I had. How'd you happen to send it, Zouri?"

"'Cause I wanted to, after you told me about Tenny; and I ain't angry with you any more, Uncle Joe! I told poppy so, too."

"I'm very glad, Zouri. We'll be good friends now, won't we, honey?"

The day was drawing to a beautiful close. All along by the side of the water and in the woods and fields the sounds of night could be heard as the shadows of twilight grew longer and the last rosy light of the day melted into darkness.

Zouri slipped from Uncle Joe's arms to the ground after they had safely passed the pond, but she held his hand and he saw that he must take her home, or at least within sight of the house.

"Zouri," he asked, "did your father know you were going to bring me that valentine?"

"No; I wouldn't tell him what it was. He knew I was going to do something he didn't want me to; but Georgia and Lous'any knew, and they told me I'd be whipped for it. But I won't!"

They were drawing near home now. The lighted candles and lamps shone with a cheerful light in the darkness.

"I'll leave you at the big gate, Zouri. You won't be afraid then, I reckon."

Zouri did not answer, and Joe felt a pain at his heart as the thought came that, after all, the child did not care whether he went further or not.

"Here he comes!" she cried, suddenly. "He's hunting for me, I reckon. Now he'll make you come in and sit on the other side of the chimly!"

Yes, there was Seth coming along the road to meet them. Joe pressed Zouri's hand tightly in his and was silent.

Seth called out in the darkness: "Zouri, is that you?"

"Yes, poppy; I and Uncle Joe. He brought me home."

Seth stopped an instant and then came nearer.

"Is it you, Joe?"

"Yes, Seth; me an' Zouri." Joe felt the need of companionship just then.

"Shake hands with Uncle Joe, poppy! He's comin' in to sit in that chair across the chimly from you. I asked him to!"

Seth held out his hand and said: "Come on, Joe, that chair's been empty these four years. I reckon you'd better come in and use it tonight. Zouri's got better sense than her father."

"I told him 'bout Tenny, Uncle Joe, an' he's sorry, too," said Zouri.

Seth laid one hand on Joe's shoulder, while with the other he led little Zouri toward the house. Both arm-chairs were filled that evening, and a little curly-headed girl sat first on the knees that occupied one chair, and then on those which occupied the other, until at last she fell asleep in Uncle Joe's arms, and was carried to bed with his kiss and blessing resting on her forehead.

"There ain't many like her, Seth," he said. "You ought to be mighty thankful you've got Zouri. I'd lie down and die this minute if I could see my Tenny strong and hearty like her."

Then there came a pause.

"Did you suspect what she was up to, Seth?"

"I wasn't rightly certain but it had something to do with you or Tenny. But Zouri's queer, and when she sets out to do a thing there's no stopping her, so I generally keep still and wait till she's done it before I say much."

"Did you ever know anybody else like that, Seth?"

Then there was a laugh—a laugh brought back from the past years of love and brotherly kindness, and it was full of promise for the years to come.

In a few days there was a reunion at Seth's home of the six little states.

They were all there, Missouri heading the list. Next to her was little Tennessee, with her crutches; then Lous'any, Georgia, Florida and Virginia.

I do not know if other states have been added to this union since, but I do know that Zouri's valentine brought back a peace that has been abiding.—Helen F. Kendrick, in Youth's Companion.

THE ANIMAL HUNT.

Christmas Time Has an Added Charm for Southern Boys.

We used to have hunts on Saturdays, just we boys, with perhaps a black boy or two of our particular cronies; but the great hunt was "in the holidays"—that is, about Christmas. Then all the young darkies about the place were free and ready for sport.

This Christmas hunt was an event.

It was the year 186–, and, Christmas day falling on a Sunday, Saturday was given as the first day of the holidays. It had been a fine fall; the cover was good, and old hares were plentiful. It had been determined some time before Christmas that we would have a big hare-hunt on that day, and the "boys"—that is, the young darkies—came to the house from the quarters, prepared, and by the time breakfast was over they were waiting for us around the kitchen door. Breakfast was always late about Christmas time; perhaps the spareribs and sausages and the jelly, dripping through a blanket hung over the legs of an upturned table, accounted for it; and on this Christmas eve it was ten by the tall clock in the corner of the dining-room before we were through. When we came out, the merry darkies were waiting for us around the kitchen door, grinning and showing their shining teeth, and laughing and shouting, and calling the dogs. They were not allowed to have guns; but our guns, long old single barrels handed down for at least two generations, had been carried out and cleaned, and they were handing them around, inspecting and aiming them with as much pride as if they had been brand new. There was only one exception to this rule: Uncle Limpy Jack, so called because he had one leg shorter than the other, was allowed to have a gun. He was a sort of professional hunter about the place. No lord was ever prouder of a special privilege handed down in his family for generations.

The other fellows were armed with stout sticks and made much noise. Uncle Limpy-Jack was, as stated, the only exception; he was grave as became a "man" who was a hunter by business, and "warn't arter no foolishness." He allowed no one to touch his gun, which thus possessed a special value. He carried his powder in a gourd and his shot in an old rag.

The pack of dogs I have described, fully recruited, were hanging around, growling and snarling, sneaking into the kitchen and being kicked out by Aunt Betty and her corps of varicolored assistants, largely augumented at the approach of Christmas and its cheer. The yelping of the mongrel pack, the shouts and whoops of the boys, and the laughter of the maids or men about the kitchen or backyard, all in their best clothes and in high spirits, were exhilerating, and with many whoops and much "hollering" we climbed the yard fence, and disdaining a road, of course, set out down the hill across the field, taking long strides, each one bragging oudly what he would do.

The February Wide Awake

Comes promptly to hand with an exceedingly varied and entertaining list of contents. We wonder if the parents of our boys and girls really know what an excellent and absorbing story Mrs. Mary McIntosh Cox is giving us in her serial "Jack Brereton's Three Months' Service?" While the young people read it with growing interest and imbibe lessons in honor, manliness and devotion to duty from its stirring incidents, not one of the elder generation but can live again in the dramatic scenes of 1861 which it portrays, when homes were rent and anxious hearts were over-strained. The story appeals to all. So, too, though in a different way, does the Arabian story of pluck and endurance, "The Lance of Kanana," thrill its readers month by month. The camel race over the desert described in the February number is full of a force and fire that stirs the blood of every reader. Among the important contributions to the February WIDE AWAKE is the last story, "The Sign of the Prophet Jonah," ever written by Eliot McCormick, one of New York's promising newspaper men, untimely cut off by death scarcely six months since. Mrs. Harriet Maxwell-Converse has another of her interesting Indian articles "With Seventy Chiefs at Ohswekan;" Mrs. Maud Howe Elliott talks delightfully about "Some Horses that I have known;" Mrs. Jane G. Austin gives the charming story of "Lora Standish's Sampler," of which all readers of "Standish of Standish" and "Betty Alden" will be glad to know more. Lovers of adventure will enjoy Lieut. Col. Thorndike's thrilling experience "In the Straits of Cape Horn;" Harriet Pickney Huse's sketch of a storm "On a Florida Reef," and Henry Cleveland Wood's Kentucky pioneer story "Under Fire." Dorothy Holcomb's "Writings-down" about "The Night of the Fire" will raise the ready smile. "The First Steamboat" and "A Pet Seal" are short instructive papers, and the department "Men and Things" is full of readable items. The poetry of the number is excellent. The pictures in the number are illustrative and characteristic, and the feeling that the children of this generation who have the possibilities of regularly reading so helpful and elevating a magazine as WIDE AWAKE are blessed indeed, is emphasized again by a perusal of the February issue.

WIDE AWAKE is published at 20 cents per number, $2.40 per year.

A Wild Duck's Forethought.

An English correspondent describes an interesting case of a wild duck's forethought. A mowing machine was set to work round the outside of a field of lucerne bordering a marsh, diminishing the circle each time round the field, leaving about two acres in the center. A wild duck was seen by the shepherd to fly from the piece of lucerne that was left with something in her beak, and, happening to fly near him, she dropped a three-parts incubated egg. She was again observed by the shepherd, and also by the sheep-shearer, carrying another egg in her beak, this time over the marsh wall toward the saltings; and again she was seen for the third time carry an egg in her beak in the same direction. Next day, when the field was finished by the removal of the last piece of lucerne, the wild duck's nest, from which the eggs had been removed, was discovered.—Chicago Times.

Unanswerable.

"Remember, James," said the sorrowing parent to the family scapegrace, "if you spend your money in drink you will never get ahead."

"But, father," responded the unrepentant prodigal, "I was out with the boys last night, and gee-whiz! but I've got a head to-day!"—Chicago Times.

HOUSEHOLD REPAIRS.

Mechanical Ability a Good Quality in a Housewife.

It is always a good thing for a housekeeper to be possessed of enough mechanical ability for her to make various trifling repairs about the house, rather than to have to wait until they aggregate a sufficient sum to justify the sending for a workman to attend to them. Who has not watched a water faucet drip, drip, drip, relentlessly and continuously, and has not longed for a wrench and a leather wash, and the ability to use them. One feels that it is almost insulting to the autocratic plumber to ask him to attend to so slight a defect in only one faucet. As a matter of fact, a great many housekeepers have learned how to put in a wash and thus remedy one of the miseries of the kitchen. There is hardly anything which is more annoying than a refractory lock, yet there is scarcely anything more easily repaired, provided it is not an elaborate lock and is not broken. The mechanism of bureau and other furniture locks is quite likely to get out of order after some years of use. These may be removed with a small screw-driver, and if one does not understand at first what is the trouble or how the parts should go together, one may take off a lock, similar to it which is in good working order, and learn the trouble and how to put the parts together again. One thing which is very apt to be the trouble when a lock refuses to turn is rust. This may usually be remedied by putting in a few drops of oil from the sewing-machine can, without removing the lock. Whenever a lock is removed and replaced, it should be thoroughly oiled.—N. Y. Tribune.

His Mitigating Circumstances.

"Are you aware of any mitigating circumstances in your case?" asked the justice the other day of a colored citizen charged with stealing a coat.

"Yes, sah; lots ob 'em. Ef I had time, jedge, I could talk to you for a week on dat subject."

"If you know of any mitigating circumstance, please state it."

"Yes, sah; I'll tell you ob one right now, sah. How easy would it have been for me to bring my family inter disgrace and misery, sah, by stealing dat coat. But I didn't do it, sah. Anudder mitigatin' circumstance am—"

--Supper at City Hall to-night.

--Mrs. Nancy Rader and daughter Aida have been on the sick list this week.

—By that critical bird the Eagle we are informed that Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Davis have a "young one".

--The cases of Scarlet fever in this neighborhood have recovered, and the quarantines have been raised.

--Mrs. Coolen, of Pellican Lake is sick at her son John's residence here. Chris Coolen, another son, was over visiting her this week.

—Persons wishing to know the condition of the State treasury at the close of Janruary should consult the report on the second page of this paper.

—Among the cattle buyers present at the fair, on Saturday, we noticed Chris Hehl, of Long Lake and the irrepressible Pat Mc Neely of Woodland.

—Conzet and Stewart have dissolved partnership. Ed thinks of locating at Eagle Bend, Todd County, among the Alliance people. Charley will continue business here. See notice.

—Cards are out announcing the wedding on the 15th. inst in Minneapolis of, Fred P. Bennett and Lilian E. Jordan. The newly wedded couple will take up their residence in Fargo. The Bride is a sister of Jordon Brothers of the Waverly Tribune.

—Mrs. Seiloff received a surprise on Monday when her brother-in-law, Carl Seiloff, of Hanove, drove over with his sister, her husband, Jacob Seuwald: and two children, from Stillwater. Mrs. S. had not seen the Stillwater people for seven years.

—J.D. Young drove over to Rockford Station, on Saturday evening with a load of passengers bound for the west, consisting of County Treasurer Mc Knight, and his assistant Geo. Carpenter, William Klatt Annandale's Miller, and the village attorney of Maple Lake, John F. Collins.

—Mr. O. H. Havill, cashier of the Bank of Royalton made us a pleasant call on Saturday. He came over to attend the Delano Fair for the purpose of getting pointers, with a view of establishing a like institution at that place, to which the fame of Delano's Fair has spread.

—Just before leaving for Buffalo on Sunday evening, Treasurer Mc Knight handed us an account of the three days work in Delano, as follows: No. of receipts issued 357. Total collection $3.178.76. This would be an average of $8.90 each. About $2,000.00 of this is for school purposes.

—Rev. Davis, of Buffalo, and Rev. Higgins, of Annandale, drove over to call on Rev. Davies of this place on Tuesday. Not finding him at home they enjoyed the hospitalities of mine host Young for a season, favoring the guests with some fine music. They say they kind of like this place and as usual with clerical gentlemen left an appointment to return at some future date.

- Ben Willcut, who discoverd a broken rail on the G. N., a mile or so east of this place, on Sunday a week ago and ran to the station and informed the operator in time to get out a crew of men and replace it before the evening passenger train bound for the west came along, thereby averting a wreck and probably saving the company thousands of dollars, to say nothing of the human lives that would have been sacrificed in case of such an accident as that recently occuring to the Andrews family, on the N. P., received a ticket to St. Paul and return the other day, from the superintendent of the company.

—The GAZETTE relieved itself of a little more bile last week in a dozen or so paragraphs directed against the Eagle. If the GAZETTE finds amusement or profitable employment in so doing it is perfectly welcome to "fire away." Space would be wasted answering such "bosh" and we do not care to trouble our readers with a discussion that would be of no interest to them. It is sufficient to say that the few who know of the existence of such a paper know what the GAZETTE is and who publishes it.—Eagle.

The Eagle has, several times, seen fit to pick upon us in an uncomplimentary manner and should not ruffle her feathers so fiercely when we see fit to reciprocate. The amusement is not so great, but the act of defending ones self against such onslaughts as we have had to meet from time to time is profitable, when we have the satisfaction of knowing we are right. If the Eagle's interest in discussion is so small it must have recently become so, and as for a discussion concerning the bird, probably when they say "that would be of no interest to them" (their readers) they come about as near the truth as they ever do. The last sentence contained in the quotation we consider about correct and would tender our thanks for the compliment.

John B. Platner and Miss Edith Beckers were among the arrivals from the cities, on Tuesday morning.

Hon. H. C Bull, of Cokato, was a GAZETTE caller on Monday, while spending a few hours in our village.

Andrew Cruikshank, of Marshall, spent a couple of days visiting old friends and neighbors at this place this week.

Sherriff Nugent drove over from the county seat on Tuesday and spent a few hours in our village, his wife accompanied him.

Jacob Mayer and his sisters Anna and Mary returned to Great Falls on Monday after spending a couple of weeks with friends here.

INDEPENDENCE.

The latest news is gold in large quantities has been found in the El Paso mine, Colorado.

"And what was this allurement dost thou ask,
A dust dug from the bowels of the earth,
Which being cast into the fire, c me out
A shining thing that fools admired and called a God?"

Last Saturday night and Sunday brought us some fresh snow, will have sleigh riding for a few days again.

All the sick people are improving in health. Most of them are able to be out and look upon Nature once more.

A good many Independence farmers attended monthly stock fair at Delano last Saturday.

Work on the A. C. church at Armstrong is being pushed forward. Expect it will be finished by early spring.

Wheat 75cts. a bushel. O for a lodge in some vast wilderness. Well that's all right. Am not looking for riches and honor. Just now the first lines of my favorite hymn comes to mind.

"Precious thought with comfort fraught
Whatever may betide me,
Jesus gave his life to save
And he will safely hide me."

Our grain exports to foreign countries has been very large during the last few months but the large surplus of wheat in the United States was crowded upon the market early in the season and gave the grain buyers a chance to bear the prices down.

Times nor the people do not improve much, do not expect they will until after next November election.

Some of the members of Gordon Granger Post, Maple Plain, will attend the G. A. R. convention to be held in Minneapolis 17, 18, and 19th of this month.

The historical sketches given in the GAZETTE each week by the Hon. B. F. Christleib of Long Lake, of the pioneer days and early settlement of the western part of Hennepin county are quite interesting. It recalls to mind many incidents in the early settlement of this country. Although your correspondent was nothing but a lad in these early days yet I remember and sometimes with pleasure too, the many hardships we endured in those early days. In the early settlement of this country there were deer, the goose, crane, and mosquitos in great abundance. Nearly all these are extinct except the mosquito, he still hangs on to life.

JOHN H. MCGARY.

County Cullings.

In looking over the report of the commissioner of Statistics issued the 8th inst we learn that 1 676 marriages have been made in Minnesota during the past year while 6a divorces were granted in the same time or about 1 divorce for every 15 marriages. This seem to be rather a heavy percentage. Wright county has 1 9 marriages with 3 divorces or 1 marriages to 1 divorce, which is considerably better than the State average.

Elder Stafford will hold quarterly meeting on Saturday and Sunday at Montrose, Preaching at 7:30 P. M. Saturday and 11 A. M. Sunday. At Waverly 2:30 P. M. and Howard Lake 7:30 P. M.

Senator Eaton devotes about a column of his paper the Buffalo Journal, to the J. N. Stacy letter to Geo. Florida under the caption "Of Interest To old settlers." We are of the opinion that the old settlers would prefer to have these political sachems bury the hatchet until after their meeting on the 22nd.

The county Alliance will hold a convention at Maple Lake on the 22nd They seem to choose the days when farmers are busy. During the fair they held a picnic at Howard where Doc. Fish addressed them and now their convention will be at Maple Lake on old settlers day while many would like to be at Buffalo.

Some of the Waverly Tribune items seem at variance with each other. For instance in one place a great wail and lament goes up that Waverly, the boss Democratic town is liable to vote no license. In another that the editor of the BUFFALO GAZETTE is the only Democrat in the county who believes in sumptuary laws. Wonder how Editor Tanner can reconcile these statements, or what particular object he had in making them anyway?

We are in receipt of a communication from Miss M. E. Bennett, of Woodland, in reply to Mr. Tanner's article in the Waverly Tribune of last week concerning Alliance matters. Miss B. is a good writer and a woman who has read a great deal on political matters and has always been a good straight Democrat. Four years ago she was the Democratic nominee for school superintendent and is now principal of the Waverly public school. Her reply to Mr Tanner will appear in next week's GAZETTE.

While Hon. H. C. Bull, one of the 38th district representatives was in our village on Monday we took occasion to learn his views on political matters. He is one of the leaders if not the originator of the "North Star Club", which is for Cleveland, and claims that harmony must exist between it and the State Central committee. He is a Democrat but favorable to a fusion with the Alliance people with a suitable platform, as a means of getting a portion of the electoral ticket and of "doing up" the Republican party in the State. Thinks Owens would accept a nomination on a People's ticket for Governor and make a winning race. Mr. B. is at present very busily engaged in starting a bank at Cokato and consequently a little out of politics for the present. His name has been mentioned as among the possibilities for Congressman from the sixth district. He led his ticket for representative and we don't know why he shouldn't for Congressman on a People's ticket, if any body can.

The Wright County Times has a list of 56 articles on which they give prices said to have been furnished the Protection League by merchants in different places, comparing prices in 1857, 1889 and 1891. They have sugar on the list with a big reduction in price. We all know that there is no protective duty on that article now. They have binding twine with a reduction. Every Minnesota farmer must know that Hon. C. K. Davis labored hard to have it on the free list and finally got a reduction which he claims saved Minnesota farmers at least $25.000 last year. The merchants consulted by the league must have been long lived old fellows if they were selling goods in 1857, 35 years ago, and their memories must be first class to remember so distinctly, or they must have preserved their papers better than most people do. Pearl buttons on which the tariff was raised shows a raise in price since 1889. The Protective League and the Times had better try again, or quit.

The Evening Sky.

The early evening sky just now presents a spectacle of uncommon beauty. Sweeping with the eye upward from the western horizon, the lovely crescent of the new moon meets the view; next, the brilliant orb of Venus, gleaming with golden splendor; higher up is the refulgent globe of Jupiter, the largest of the planets, the fastest in circumferential motion, attended by four moons, visible in the telescope. The exterior of the earth turns at the rate of a thousand miles an hour; that of Jupiter, twenty-seven thousand miles an hour. Continuing upward are the fabled Pleiades, the seven stars, visible in all lands—a cluster of flaming suns, forever flying onward in space. The rosy red Aldebaran next is seen, burning (if you look in the spectroscope) with hydrogen, sodium, magnesium, calcium, iron, tellurium, antimony, and mercury. Looking eastward, that wondrous constellation Orion is beheld, with his three-starred belt, three equidistant suns, one degree apart, and those more distant stars, four in number, of which Regel below the belt and Betelguese above are brilliantly conspicious Below Orion, towards the east, shines the majestic Sirius, brightest of all the stars. Still eastward is Procyon, above it Castor and Pollux, Capella and Algol, all prominent in the heavenly dome.

Astronomy is indeed the sublimest of the sciences; no study is more interesting, none more elevating to the soul; yet how few pursue it! Probably less than one in ten thousand persons can recognize or name the principal constellations. The glories of the heavens pass by unnoticed and unknown.—Scientific American.

CORRESPONDENCE

ST. MICHAELS.

The marriage of Mr. John Grieb to Miss Mary Marx and John Marx to Miss Christina Walesh in St. Michaels church yesterday was witnessed by their many friends from near and far. Many presents were donated and many more hearty good wishes accompany the two couples on their new path of toil, and may they never regret the eventful moment of Feb. 9th, 1892. During the day time the guests were waited upon at the residence of B. Marx, Sr. and in the evening the young people assembled at Haffner's Hall where they enjoyed a pleasant hop.

Granny Snider's Medicine Co. have four advertisers of their life sustaining remedies here giving a free theatrical performance every evening for two weeks. Their play, "who stole the coat" performed last night at the wedding was well liked. Some remarks in the ranks of the gentler sex about the Doc. were of this style. He is a very nice f—. He's a d—dy. How is it Doc?

INGALLS LETS OUT.

The War Scare Ridiculed, and the Navy, Too.

CHICAGO, Feb. 3.—"This whole Chilian imbroglio is an illustration of the danger of our having a navy," said ex-Senator John J. Ingalls at the Grand Pacific today. "Here the Baltimore was in the harbor of Valparaiso, where she had no business to be. She had a right to be there, to be sure, and being there our flag and uniform were entitled to respect but she had no buisness there. Her sailors were on shore and got into an altercation. Had they and their ship been where they ought to have been in the harbor of San Francisco, New York, Boston, or some orther American seaport, they would not have been hurt. But the officials wanted to make a show of action, and they sent the Baltimore to Valparaiso where she had no buisness as they sent the rest of the fleet to other places where they have no business.

"The suppositious trouble with Chili was manufactured by the people who have had a direct interest in securing a big appropriation from congress to build an expensive, useless unnecessary navy. It was the annual war scare which is gotten up by those same people just about the beginning of every congress. The scare is always based on some trifling incident in itself of no importance and out of the question as a casus belli. Now just watch the course of events and see if congress is not asked to appropriate forty or fifty millions for a navy, which will only get us into trouble, just as the Baltimore did. There is no necessity for this country sending a lot of war ships swaggering around the earth saying that the United States must be respected. The United States is respected without any bullying of that sort."—Globe.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory.

Beautiful child by the mother's knee,
In the mystic future what wilt thou be?
A demon of sin, or an angel sublime—
A poison Upas, or innocent thyme—
A spirit of evil flashing down
With the lurid light of a fiery crown—
Or gliding up with a shining track,
Like the morning star that ne'er looks back;
Dantiest dreamer that ever smiled,
Wilt thou be, my beautiful child?

Beautiful child in my garden bowers,
Friend of the butterflies, birds and flowers—
Pure as the sparkling, crystalline stream,
Jewels of truth in thy fairy eyes beam—
Was there ever a whiter soul than thine
Worshipped by love in a mortal shrine?
My heart thou has gladdened for two sweet years
With rainbows of hope through mists of tears—
Mists beyond which the the sunny smile,
With its halo of glory, beams all the while.

Beautiful child, to thy look is given
A gleam serene—not of earth but of heaven;
With thy tell tale eyes and prattling tongue,
Would thou couldst ever thus be young,
Like the liquid strain of the mocking bird
From stair to hall thy voice is heard:
How oft in the garden nooks thou'rt found
With flowers thy curly head around,
And kneeling beside me, with figure so quaint!
Oh! who would not dote on my infant saint?

Beautiful child, what thy fate shall be,
Perchance is wisely hidden from me;
A fallen star thou may'st leave my side,
And of sorrow and shame become the bride—
Shivering, quivering, through the cold street
With a curse behind and before thy feet,
Ashamed to live, and afraid to die:
No home, no friend, and a pitiless sky,
Merciful Father!—my brain grows wild!—
Oh, keep from evil my beautiful child!

Beautiful child, may'st thou soar above,
A warbling cherub of joy and love,
A drop on eternity's mighty sea,
A blossom on life's immortal tree—
Floating, flowering evermore,
In the blessed light of the golden shore,
And as I gaze on thy sinless bloom,
And thy radiant beauty, they dispel my gloom,
I feel he will keep thee undefiled
And his love protect my beautiful child,

—W. A. H. Sigourney.

THE State Democratic Convention for the nomination of State officers will be held in Minneapolis on a date yet to be fixed.

L. M. LANGE, of Marshall, was elected commander of the G. A. R. in Minnesota at the meeting held in Minneapolis this week.

THE convention for the election of delegates to attend the National Democratic Convention at Chicago will be held March 31, at St. Paul.

Other Side of the Account.

Since the Eagle is so fond of giving her readers an account of her valuable deeds done in behalf of the County she should also give the debtor's side of the account so that her readers may draw up a balance sheet of their own and judge for themselves of the profitableness or unprofitableness of her assistance in conducting county affairs. In the Financial statement published in last week's Wright County Times, we notice that Justice courts cost the county $701.35, and in examining the accounts there has been paid out to which is more than one twelfth of the entire cost to the county for justice fees for the year ending Jan. 2. 1892. To say nothing about the costs in the district court this is quite a large percentage for the Eagle to have paid out in her behalf, from the county funds, and well may the bird afford to devote her columns to ferreting out the mistakes and inadvertancies of others, real or imaginary, if the county is to contribute at this rate in her defense. But leaving out district court expenses with judge, jury, witnesses, Sheriff Nugent and his deputies and all that goes to make up the district court, and there appearing no credit given the editor it seems that he began this year in debt to Wright County.

Provided the account was collectable it would read like this at present.

For Justice Court fees, year ending, Jan. 2, 1892,	$60.20
Cr. by amt. claimed to have saved county,	6.29
Balance Due, County, to even up,	$53.91

As the amount of last years indebtedness $60.20 would amount to $5.016 per month and two months have almost slipped by and only $6.29 been saved, the old bird will have to get a hump on her to come out even at the end of this year. MORAL: don't blow so much.

Elections.

Tuesday, March 8th, will be election day for town and village. This is Presidential year and the party lines are apt to be drawn more closely than usual. Democrats, don't be sleeping! Be in the field and make your nominations placing the best men you have for the respective offices in nomination and standing by them. It is a fashion among some of our politicians to circulate stories among the voters that this man and that man among those in the opposite party would be a good man, but he will not run. This is often done so effectively as to discourage one party or the other from making nominations Some are led to think all the good men, or at least all that will accept office are in the other party. This is wrong. Don't let this deter you for one moment from holding your caucuses on time and taking time to nominate a good ticket. Don't rush matters at the last day in the afternoon, but get your men in the field and elect them. Who ever heard of a Republican that would refuse to accept an office or a chance to run for one if he thought he could get it from "Jingo Jim" down. Call your caucus, give due notice. Run your caucus in a straightforward business manner, giving everybody a fair chance and those present will go home satisfied to work for the nominees. Those desiring Democratic principles to come to the front, please take the matter in hand and make the effort and see how triumphantly you will succeed.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12, 1892.

Mr Harrison is far from being as happy as he expected to be after Mr. Blaine's letter was published, if those who profess to be his friends know the state of his mind. He expected that Mr. Blaine would take occasion in that letter to advocate the nomination of Benj. H., or at least to say a good word for him in some way, and he has got it into his head that Mr. Blaine by ignoring him intended to slight him—he is very touchy about the dignity which he appears to think surrounds his person like a halo. Another thing that he doesn't like is the freedom with which Senators, Representatives, and other prominent men of his party have announced their preference for some other candidate than himself. He fears that Mr. Blaine intends to throw his influence to that mysterious "some other candidate", and he is mighty sorry that there was no truth in the rumor preyalent a day or two ago that Mr. Blaine intended resigning and going to Bermudah to remain until after the meeting of the republican convention. Nothing would suit him better just now than for Mr. Blaine to leave the country for a few months but he does not dare to ask for his resignation.

The democrats of the House have taken the first step toward turning the light on in dark places by the adoption of resolutions authorizing investigations of the World's Fair, the crooked National bank failures at Philadelphia, and most important of all, the Pension office. The resolution under which the last investigation is to be made was reported by the Committee on Rules as a substitute for those offered by Representatives Enloe and Cooper. It provides for the appointment of a select committee of five to investigate the methods of business, whether use has been made by the Commisioner of his official position to promote his private affairs or for partisan political purposes, whether there has been discrimination made between applicants for pensions or practicing attorneys, whether any of the clerks have taken advantage of their positions to make profits, and whether the civil service law has been violated by the Commissioner. On motion of Mr. Enloe the resolution was amended to include the methods of the board of pension appeals. This is a big job, but many are wondering why the resolution did not include the charges which have been repeatedly made by responsible parties of fraudulent pensioners whose names are carried upon the rolls. Perhaps, however, the committee may be able to reach that under the "methods of business" authorization.

Vice-President Morton appears to be learning the ropes. A nephew of his, W. M. Grinnell, has been nominated for the vacant Third Assistant Secretaryship of State.

The House Committee on Rivers and Harbors having given a number of hearings to interested parties, has now buckled down to the hard work of preparing a river and harbor appropriation bill that shall be just without being extravagant. The bill will not probably appropriate more than half, if so much, as the one passed at the last Congress, but it is the aim of the committee to provide all the money for necessary improvements that can be advantageously expended during the next fiscal year.

The House committee on Immigration does not agree with the Senate committee on Foreign Affairs, that a continuation of the present anti-Chinese laws, which expire by limitation this Spring, for another period of ten years, is the best thing to be done, so it has favorably reported a bill to the House which absolutely prohibits Chinese imigration.

The much talked of free coinage bill has been favorably reported to the House from the Coinage committee. Opinion differs as to whether it will be acted upon at this session. There is no doubt about a very large majority of the House being in favor of the free coinage of silver, but there are many prominent democrats, like Mr. Mills, who do not think it expedient to pass it when nothing can be gained as it is certain, even if it could get through the Senate, the Finance committee of which has this week reported adversely on a free coinage bill, that it would be vetoed. There are other democrats, like Mr. Bland, who think it the duty of the House to pass the bill.

There are lots of rumors of a rumpus between Mr. Harrison and Secretary Tracy over the enormous financial obligations incurred by the latter in preparing for the war "that never came". Wanamaker is also said to be in hot water although he denies it.

The Canadian Commisioners are going through the farce of holding conferences at the State department, knowing that there is no reciprocity for them.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

INDEPENDENCE-Continued.

Ebenezer Brandon and Miss Nancy McGary, daughter of John R. McGary, were married in September, 1855. This was the first marriage in the town of Independence.

Other parties from Indiana settled in the vicinity of the present village of Maple Plain, namely: William Norton, Elkanah Cox, brother of Vincent and David Cox, Aaron Rounds and William Fogleman, previously mentioned in connection with the first settlement of Orono. John B. Perkins settled on the south shore of Lake Independence adjoining the claim of his brother in Medina as previously stated, removing there with his family in the fall of 1855. The Perkins brothers were north Carolina Quakers. Also during the same fall Robert Stinson, of Maine settled on the south line of Independence township.

To several of these parties settling in Independence, the matter of migrating and making homes in the wilderness far beyond the appliances and conveniences of civilization, was no new experience. They were born in the east in the early days of the Republic, when the places of their birth were still in a primative state from which they removed in early life to wilds which were in the far west of that time, these parties removing to Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana Illinois and other western states, where they subdued the wilderness and established homes in which they abided for a time but as the frontier line advanced from them toward the setting sun, they became impelled to follow in anticipation of finding a better place in the wilds beyond and soon those homes were disposed of and they again were found in the front of the march of empire taking its way westward, amongst whom might be mentioned John R. McGary born in Ky. 1803 in 1828 emigrated to Missouri, in 1835 returned to Kentucky, and in 1840 removed to Indiana, from where he removed to Minnesota in 1855; Moses Brandon, born in Carlisle, Penn. about 1804, was taken by his parents while yet a child, with them as they migrated to Kentucky, where he was raised, afterwards lived in Jefferson county Indiana, having in the mean time married and raised a family most of whom came with him to Minnesota in 1855; John Williams born in the state of New York in 1818, on arriving at manhood went to Indiana, where he entered the army during the Mexican war and served under General Winfield Scott in the several engagements leading to the capture of the City of Mexico and on his return to Indiana from Mexico married Miss Brandon and in 1855 removed to Minnesota; Job Moffat, who was a native of North Carolina, resided for a time in Indiana, finally coming to Minnesota in 1854 and likewise William Fogleman was a native of North Carolina, later a resident of Indiana and finally coming to Minnesota in 1855; William Cox, who long previous to the inauguration of railroad transportation in his locality started from the state of Georgia with an ox team and emigrated to and resided in different states, keeping in advance of railroads with his ox team finally stopped in Independence in 1855, where at last he was overtaken by the improved system of transportation in the St. Paul and Pacific R. R. Co. in constructing its line through his farm in 1867, also a number of others might be added whose experience the writer has not learned.

Thomas Astrope and his son William settled in the north part of Independence township in 1855, and James Wilson settled north of Armstrong station on road opened by J. D. Young.

GREENWOOD-1855

Referring to what was heretofore stated concerning E. O. Newton and wife settling at the confluence of the north and south forks of Crow river, other circumstances may be mentioned.

From information received from land seekers, hunters and trappers several parties of Shakopee conceived the idea of laying out a townsite at the confluence of the north and south Forks of Crow river, which place and surrounding country was then an unbroken wilderness. Those parties constituted themselves into a townsite company, their names being E. O. Newton, Thomas Holmes, Samuel Allen, Matthew and Albert Taisey, — Bucklin, — Chase and Robert Kennedy and early in 1855, Newton, Holmes, Allen, the Taiseys (father and son) came to the proposed site for the future town, which was named Greenwood, and commenced preliminary operations making surveys and settlements. The first house was built by the townsite company, which on its completion was occupied by Newton and wife, the second house was erected by Albert Taisey and occupied by him and wife, Mrs. Taisey being the next white woman after Mrs. Newton settling in the Crow River Valley; Samuel Allen erected the third house in Greenwood which he and wife occupied on its completion.

Simultaneously with the commencement of Greenwood other parties took claims adjoining the townsite and in the surrounding country, namely: James D. Young and William Gould (as before stated) and John B. Edgar. In the following September, John F. Power and A. W. Dorman and their families settled on lands on Crow river and adjoining the townsite. About this time A. D. Sexton came to Greenwood.

During the summer of 1855 the lakes in the vicinity were named, some of which received the first names of the wives of the pioneers and others the names of the sweethearts of unmarried pioneers. Rebecca was named for Mrs. Samuel Allen, and the names of Sarah, Martha and Charlotte were given to other lakes in the vicinity. Some of these names emanated from the brain of James D. Young.

CORRESPONDENCE

MAPLE LAKE.

The attendance at the lyceum Saturday evening, Feb. 13th, as usual was large. The exercises were very interesting. The band gave some fine music. There was a recitation by George Gorman—Master George did very well. The reading of the Maple Lake "Astonisher" by Miss M. E. McCarthy, furnished great amusement, Miss McCarthy had a brilliant production. The Advent of the "Astonisher" into the journalistic world marks an era in the history of journalism. The young lady announced that Joseph Kevany is the editor in chief, that he contemplates the herculean task of eliminating from the universe a large amount of darkness by the instrumentality of philosophical light, etc. The advertisments were remarkably unique. That of J. F. Collins announced the marvelous fact that his patient labors have been blessed with the realization of the poets dream and philosopher's aspiration—not by the discovery of that comparatively insignificant thing, the philosopher's stone—but by the discovery of the secret art which enables Mr. Collins to invest the wingless nymphean graces with immortal youth and eternal beauty. Not a whit more commonplace is A. A. Jewett's advertisement in the "Astonisher". It shows him to be the prince of the world's biographers; that he has for universal gratuitous distribution the quintessance of the quaint magical and wierd literature of all time. He wishes to invite the attention of all lovers—but especially "If ever chance two wandering lovers brings, to Paraclete's white walls and silver springs" he invites their attention to that great edition of "Jewett's and Gulliver's travels by Moonlight" It leads the tourist along the silver shores of lonely lakes, through enchanted glades to fountains of nectar, "to isles of fragrance, lily-silvered vales, diffusing langor in the panting gales", through flowery vales where the birds incessantly chant their vesper lays, etc. Anologus to these is R. M. Glynn's ad. In the olden time when the weary impecunius passenger had paid his fare he obtained a ticket to Buffalo, Rockford or to any of the other vast unmaratime cities. Under the new dispensation when the traveler asks for a ticket for any of the aforesaid places, with more than ordinary official courtsey he is handed a ten thousand mile ticket, continuous passage, as heretofore. Under the old regime as the famine stricken passenger began to taste his dearly paid for meal the wily conductor rung his bell and Mr. Passenger had to hie off, a poorer and weaker man. To obviate this hardship Mr. Glynn places a ring on the passenger's finger with full instructions that by touching it a genius will at once appear in his presence laden with all the delacacies that minister to gustatory pleasure.

LONG LAKE.

Sel Coleman, of Whateom, Washington, has been visiting old friends here for the past week.

Jos Brown, of Marshall, Lyon Co., Minn. spent a few days this week with James Dillman. Mr. Brown is in the boot and shoe business at Marshall.

Hon. B. E. Christleib went to Hutchinson, Monday.

Miss C. B. Miller, of Winsted, spent Sunday in Long Lake.

Guy Dickey made a business trip to Minneapolis, Monday.

H. B. Grifling, of Buffalo, spent the past week with Bro. Gardner.

Mrs. O. T. Olson and Miss Nellie McKenzie went to Minneapolis Tuesday morning.

Quite a number of young people of Maple Plain came down to the C. E. rally the 12th.

Joe Reiser is on the sick list.

Aug Brushwiller died Wednesday afternoon. It seems he had the grip and caught cold which settled on his lungs. He leaves a wife and two children.

INDEPENDENCE.

A little colder and better sleighing. Snow is better than mud.

All the sick are getting better and pretty soon everybody will be digging roots for spring bitters.

Wm. Andrews, of Silver Creek, Wright county, Minn., attended church at Independence A. C. church last Sunday; also, J. Raymond, of Eagle Lake, Minn.

The auction at A. R. Chaffee's last Saturday went off very well, most of his goods brought a fair price. Mr. Chaffee intends to look for greener pastures somewhere. Thinks Minn too cold.

Last Saturday night W. Fredericks' who lives on north shore of Lake Sarah in town of Greenwood, lost his barn by fire. Everything inside was consumed. 24 head of cattle, 3 horses and over 100 fowls, hay, grain, hogs, farming implements, all perished in the flames. We learn it was partly covered by insurance. Mr. Fredericks has the sympathy of the whole community.

The Republican rally at the Town Hall, Armstrong, on Thursday evening of last week was a heavenly sitting together, the sheep and the goats were well mixed up. The tariff on wool was openly discussed and it had a tendency to bear the price of wool down. Tin plate was slightly refered to. The best article your correspondent has ever seen on American tin plate is pumpkin pie. There were some 4 or 5 speakers, all from Minneapolis, their names as follows; Nash, Pendergrass, Murty, Simpson and John Goodnow. Mr. Pendergrass was the principle speaker, his subject being that of the tariff and the McKinley bill. The Republicans will have another rally at Armstrong, Thursday evening, 10th of March.

DIED, At his home in Independence, Feb. 7th, with cancer in the face, Henry Klappich. He was buried at Catholic church in Medina on Tuesday following. Mr. Klappich was about 80 years of age.

Mr. Editor, with nerve unsteady and my brain in a whirl, will try and report to you, or rather give you the outline of the Prohibition meeting held at Town Hall, Armstrong, last night. Mr. James Pinkham, of Minneapolis, was the Demosthenes of the evening. The house was full and he gave us a straight talk of 4 hours without stopping for refreshments. It was the most logical thing of the kind we ever heard. Mr. Pinkham is a siege gun for the Prohibition party, fortified and entrenched behind their works, loaded muzzle mouth deep with documentary and statistical evidence against the liquor traffic and at times would make the two old parties look like a mere speck upon the political horizon. He also refreshed our minds of slavery times and the war, showed up the tariff and the McKinley bill. The high license he showed up in all its misgivings and we would judge from all he said (having no disposition to dispute it) that if an emetic was given to the United States in large doses, have no conception of what kind of a monstrosity she would heave up, whether of quadruped form or an image of one of the deciples of Belzibub.

The Hoisingtons gave us some fine song appropriate for the occasion.

And so ended the meeting.

JOHN H. MCGARY.

In thirty of the largest cities of the country there are now well-equipped cooking schools.

"The tongue is an unruly member," and there are three thousand languages in the world to "sass back" in.

The oldest man now living who was an American soldier in the war of 1812 is thought to be Benjamin Poor, of Raymond, N. H. He is now 97 years old.

The fire loss of the United States and Canada for the month of January last, so far as reported, amounts to $12,564,900, against $11,230,000 in January, 1891, and $9,179,300 in January, 1890.

It is alleged that the Louisiana Lottery Company will wind up its business in 1894, when its charter expires. Were not there so many people fairly aching to be robbed, it would not require two years for the concern to go out of business.

There are now 10,000 foreign mission stations of all denominations in the world, 6,300 missionaries, 12,000 native preachers trained by them, 300,000 Sunday school children of heathen parents, 12,000 day schools with 500,000 pupils, and over 600,000 Christians converted from heathenism.

Lieut. C. A. L. Totten, of the United States army, who is military instructor at Yale college, is creating a sensation by predicting dire commotions, important planetary events and a general cataclysm of affairs between now and 1899. But the earth will go its old course, probably, for at least a few centuries longer.

Prof. Swift says that "our winters, instead of growing milder, for 1,500 years past have been more severe since A. D. 1250, at which time the earth was in perihelion at the winter solstice, December 21, instead of January 1, as at the present time." Still we appear to be getting a little of that perihelion, or something, this winter.

John Cook was released the other day from the penitentiary at Lincoln, Neb. Years ago he committed a murder, for which he was hanged and shot by lynchers, but recovered after being cut down by the sheriff; and when placed on trial, in view of the violence he had suffered, was given but a life sentence. Commutation and good conduct secured his liberty.

Have you noticed it? If not, look at your calendars and there you will discover that, besides being leap year, 1892 is a year of Mondays. Most of the holidays come on that day. Washington's birthday does, Memorial day, Fourth of July and Labor day, celebrated on September 5. Then Christmas and New Year's day, coming on Sunday, will naturally be kept on the Monday following.

The secretary of war has transmitted to congress a statement showing the military force of the United States organized and unorganized, according to the latest returns received at the office of the adjutant general of the army. The abstract shows that the total number of enlisted men is 101,821, commanded by 8,879 commissioned officers, besides 1,248 staff officers, making a total aggregate of 111,948 men in the militia service. The number of men available for military duty unorganized is 8,567,258.

The Des Moines Register is in receipt of a letter from "all-around man" who is seeking a position in a newspaper office, and writes that "during my reign I have filled the position of foreman, proof reader, telegraph editor, occasional reporter, filled the editor's chair and have done considerable stereotyping." That is a pretty fair "lay-out," but we do not need him, as we desire to keep at work ourselves, and do not fancy a man who can run the whole outfit and would probably try to do so.

If we decipher correctly the prophecy of the ground hog as recorded in our infallible exchanges, says the Chicago Tribune, this will be the most unique and variegated spring on record. Winter will rage in numberless spots all over the country, while in other spots equally innumerable the bluebirds will be singing, the flowers growing, the bees humming and the spring fever getting in its deadly work; and these spots are scattered so indiscriminately over the land that in many places they overlap. There is going to be trouble.

The report of the New York state board of health illustrates how completely medical science has mastered one epidemic disease, smallpox, and how little knowledge it has gained as to the la grippe. The bulletin issued estimates the total number of deaths from all causes in that state for 1891 at 128,578. This makes the death rate for the year 21.43 per thousand of population. Epidemic influenza is estimated to have caused 8,000 deaths during its prevalence in March, April and May, and 2,000 deaths upon its re-appearance in December. It was distributed uniformly throughout the state.

The career of Louise Pomeroy, who is now playing minor parts in a traveling theatrical company, is a striking instance of the mutations of fortune. Twenty years ago she was the bride of "Brick" Pomeroy, and had received from him as a wedding gift an opera house valued at $75,000. Pomeroy at that time was reputed to be worth $500,000, and his Democrat was a gold mine. The editor's fortune was subsequently lost in unproductive mines and in the famous Rocky mountain tunnel, and luck has ever since been against him. Mrs. Pomeroy is now the wife of the actor, Arthur Elliott.

Carlyle W. Harris, a young medical student of New York city, surreptitiously married a girl student at one of the colleges. He was unable to support her. Secret difficulties occurred, and she died suddenly. Harris had given her an alleged prescription of quinine and morphine. She was embalmed and buried and many weeks afterward her body was disinterred and an autopsy held. Morphine in fatal quantities was found in her system. It took a ten days' trial to prove that she died from this poison administered by Harris, and the doctors and chemists swore exactly contrary to each other. Such is science.

A GRAND SPECTACLE.

A Remarkable Display of Aurora Borealis Visible at Numerous Points in the United States.

New York, Feb. 15.—The heavens presented a magnificent display of the aurora borealis Saturday evening. Shortly after 7 o'clock it suddenly burst forth from the northern sky like long, lofty banners of fire. The columns of scarlet light rose higher and higher, until they almost reached the zenith, and then sank away again to mere tufts of fire. Again they spread in ribbons of claret-colored light almost across the northwestern horizon, making a sight of magnificent beauty. Then the columns of each end of the aurora's arch disappeared, only to increase the glitter and glory of the central pillars of fire. Thus apparently strengthened, this pillar shot far toward the zenith, looking like a large Ionic column supporting the vault of the sky. The fluted column was as perfect and regular as any ever seen in Grecian temple. The reflection of the crimson colors upon the waters of the North river was brilliant in the extreme. The river seemed a mass of flowing claret or a river of blood. At first it was feared in the city that some fire had begun its ravages and had thrown its reflection upon the skies. There was for a time some excitement in the fire department, and alarms were expected at every minute.

Chicago, Feb 15.—The display of aurora borealis Saturday evening was possibly the most wonderful exhibition of the kind ever seen from the American soil. Dispatches to the Associated Press show that the phenomenon stretched over a great belt of territory from Iowa to the Atlantic ocean. The magnificent spectacle was scientifically observed at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor. Astronomical Director W. J. Hussey, of the institution, wired the result to the Associated Press as follows:

"The brilliant red rose aurora visible Saturday night was not altogether unexpected. In a general way auroras have been predicted for about this time. Saturday night's display naturally follows the appearance of the great sun spot which has been visible during the past week. Other auroral displays may be expected in the near future."

Other dispatches to the Associated Press show that the phenomenon was witnessed at New York, Louisville, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Toledo, Detroit, Indianapolis, and at Illinois and Iowa points, but not at St. Louis, Kansas City or Memphis.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Feb. 15.—W. J. Hussey, of the university observatory, says that the great sun spot observed by Miss Low, of Toronto, on the 10th was discovered by him on the 5th. This he thinks was undoubtedly the first observation made by anyone, as it would scarcely have been possible to discover it a day earlier, the sun's revolution not having progressed far enough. He estimates that it is 100,000 miles long by 50,000 or 60,000 in breadth. The black spots around the enormous fissure have now broken up into smaller ones, and Mr. Hussey is of the opinion that the vast chasm will soon disappear.

SINGULAR LOVE AFFAIR.

A Bigamous Couple Return to Their Other Halves After Five Years.

Meeker county is the scene of a very queer love affair. William Brinty, a man whose family had been blessed with two pairs of twins and several other children, about five years ago left his family and home with the wife of Marcus Martin. Martin, although feeling badly over the loss of his wife, did not lose courage, but succeeded in tracking the runaway pair to Ohio, where he went to see them. He did not see Britney, for he made himself scarce when he learned that Martin was in town. Martin remained with his runaway wife for two or three days, during which time Britney did not put in an appearance. Martin then returned home and has since been keeping bachelor's hall on his farm in the woods. Recently the people who are familiar with the circumstances of the case were very much surprised to learn that the runaway pair had returned. Britney went back to his family, taking with him the child that was born to Mrs. Martin during their absence, and Mrs. Martin went back to her husband. After five years the families are straightened out, and the neighbors say everything is lovely.

RICH IN IRON ORE.

Marvelous Wealth Recently Discovered in the Lake Superior Region.

The sale of iron stocks of properties on the Mesabi range is now active. Facts have come to light through recent explorations which make the Mesabi range the most remarkable ever discovered. In two mines, the Cincinnati and Pewabik, there are fully 18,000,000 tons of granular Bessemer ore in sight. On the properties o the Mesabi range sufficiently developed to show something of the extent of ore upon them, there is said to be, by reliable explorers, more ore than has been shipped from all the Lake Superior iron regions in the past thirty years of their history. During that time about 68,000,000 tons have been shipped.

Given an Overdose.

The infant child of Joseph Pashelka, a Polish resident of Winona, was killed by having an overdose of an opiate given to it. The medicine was intended for soothing, and was mixed according to a prescription written for the child's grandmother ten years ago. The child being restless was given a dose equivalent to half of that taken by an adult, and as it was only two months old it went to sleep never to awake again. The father blames the druggist for putting up a wrong prescription, but the physician who wrote the prescription holds the druggist blameless and says the medicine should never have been given the child without orders from a physician.

He gradually sank and at his death an examination was held with the aforesaid results. Taffeta Dresses.

Youthful dresses for dances and dinners are made of white taffeta silks speckled with tiny white dots, and plainly set with Pompadour bouquets or sprigs of roses, heather, or pink bavardia. They are made with a plaited corsage rounded nearly to the shoulder-tips, and trimmed with a bertha of chiffon the color of the blossoms caught up on each shoulder with a bunch of flowers. The belt is of satin embroidered with iridescent beads. Elbow sleeves puffed high at the top are finished with folds and frills of chiffon. The bell skirt of the usual five breadths, sloped to three at the top, has triangular pieces of chiffon set on at the foot, with a vine of the blossoms on the longest of the three sides of each piece, making diagonal rows that are very effective.—Harper's Bazar.

GATHERING IT IN.

Seldom is complaint made of a too generous return from the land. Judging, however, by the reports from across the line the Canadians in the prairie provinces had this year such an abundant crop that they could with difficulty handle it, and in some instances contented themselves for the present with marketing only the choicest of their fields. They may be envied by some, but no man grudges them their good fortune, for the same advantages which they possess are open to all who choose to avail themselves of the opportunity to possess a share of the land that is so fruitful. And whether on one side of the line or the other it is all adding to the wealth of the American Continent. And they exhibit no churlishness in the matter, come one come all is the principle that actuates them in the distribution of their lands. They ask no questions about a man's nationality or opinions. If he wants land he is free to take it, without money and without price. It is enough for them that he wishes, as they do, to enjoy his home, make enough money and join with them in educating the children and providing for the family. And they have such a wealth of the most fertile land in the world they are only anxious that the newcomer should make a good selection and become prosperous. And their government and railway companies have taken care that he shall make no mistake if they can prevent it. Careful surveys have been made even of the new districts so that an incomer may in Winnipeg learn as much concerning any specified section as if he were on the ground himself. The park lands of Assiniboia, the fertile valleys of the Saskatchewan and the dairy and ranching country of Alberta are pierced by railways all centering in Winnipeg. The tide that is beginning to set into these western farming districts is not much to be wondered at.

THE following was written for the occasion of Washington's inauguration by Samuel Low and sung by a boatload of some twenty-five ladies and gentlemen during the passage of the presidential party from the New Jersey shore to New York city:

"Hail, bright auspicious day!
Long shall America
Thy praise resound.
Joy to our native land!
Let every heart expand,
For Washington's at hand
With glory crown'd!

"Columbia's children, hail!
Behold, before the gale
Your chieftain comes!
The matchless hero's nigh,
Now raise your plaudits high;
With trumpets rend the sky,
And martial drums.

"Illustrious warrior, hail!
Oft did thy sword prevail
O'er hosts of foes.
Come, and fresh laurels claim;
Still dearer make thy name,
Long as immortal fame
Her trumpet blows.

"Thrice welcome to this shore,
Our leader now no more,
But ruler thou.
Oh, truly good and great!
Long live to glad our state,
Where countless honors wait
To deck thy brow.

"Hush'd be the din of arms:
Henceforth the olive's charms
Shall war preclude.
These shores a head shall own
Unsullied by a throne—
Our much lov'd Washington,
The great, the good!"

HOPE'S TROUBLES

A STORY FOR Washington's Birthday

THE winter of 1779 was approaching spring. But it was still dismally cold, and all day there had been a drip, drip of chilly rain around a two-story farmhouse which clung to a New Jersey hillside, a short distance from Morristown, where the American army under Gen. George Washington was encamped.

Hope Howell, a thoughtful-faced little girl of eleven, dressed in a plain, homespun gown, sat by the bedside of her feeble grandfather, and strove earnestly to divert the invalid's mind from the noises which came from the kitchen downstairs.

"Never mind, grandfather," she said, comfortingly. "They are American soldiers, and will not harm us, if they are rude. If Gen. Washington only knew how they are behaving, I know he would send them away. There, don't mind—please don't!" she pleaded, bending over the nervous sufferer and stroking the gray locks away from the aged face.

A hoarse voice sang a fragment of an army song; boisterous cheers followed; then the exchange of jokes was resumed by the troopers seated around the kitchen fire.

These sounds all penetrated to the chamber above, disturbing the peace of the sick man and awakening fresh apprehensions in Hope's young heart.

Twice that afternoon she had crept timidly downstairs and had asked the men if they wouldn't please be more quiet for her sick grandfather's sake.

It is due those soldiers to say that they respected the little girl's request and tried to obey her. But some hard cider they had found in the cellar played havoc with their resolutions to "quiet up," and they indulged in such a rough kind of merriment as would have vastly surprised themselves in their sober moments.

"As if it were not bad enough to arrest my brave son on suspicion of his being a traitor," moaned the old man, as his grandchild tried to soothe him, "they must suspect us of being tories and guard our home as if we were in actual league with the enemy. It is dreadful to bear!"

"Yes, grandfather, it is hard for us," said the child; "but please try not to worry. Father is not a traitor, and he must come clear of the charge," declared Hope, with a flash of her dark eyes.

"Heaven bless you, Hope!" replied the old man, placing a trembling hand on her crown of nut-brown curls. "We will pray for the vindication of your father's good name and his restoration to a place of honor in the American army. It can't be that he must die as a traitor—my son, so brave and true."

"No, no, grandfather!" assured the little girl. "He will not."

It required no light effort for Hope to keep up a semblance of cheerfulness before the invalid, for her own heart was sorely weighed down with troubles.

Only that day had the unpleasant news been brought them that brave Albert Howell, the old man's son and Hope's father, had been arrested on the serious charge of purposing to reveal the plans of the American army to the enemy.

He had proved a valiant soldier, had gained the respect of his officers, and had just been mentioned for promotion.

Howell indignantly denied the charge, but a mysterious paper found on his person made it look very dark for him. However, he insisted that he knew nothing about the paper, declaring it must have been placed in his pocket while he slept.

But his word was not sufficient to enable him to escape imprisonment, and the trial which he would have to undergo the next day.

A few troopers under a sub-officer had been sent to watch the house of the prisoner's father, who was forthwith suspected of being a Tory sympathizer. They had no orders to enter the farmhouse, as they had done, but the inclement weather pierced to their very marrow, and made the big fireplace in the wide old-kitchen too inviting to resist. It had been a weary day to the prisoner at Morristown and a very sad one to Hope and the old grandfather.

The presence of the troopers, who had taken possession of the house below stairs, increased their apprehensions, and it was not until long in the night that their rude jollity ceased and the nervous sufferer became somewhat quiet.

Then Hope sang to him soft and low, as a mother over a sick child. It was not long before she had the satisfaction of seeing the weary eyelids close over the sunken eyes. But she did not cease her low singing until the regular breathing told her that her grandfather slept.

Then she rose noiselessly from her seat on the bedside, and, going to the window, looked out into the dark night.

It was growing chillier without, and the rain had ceased.

"I must go," she said, resolutely, to herself. "If I can but see Gen. Washington I am sure he will not let my father die a traitor's death. He is too good to let such a wrong be done, and he must believe me that my father would never be guilty of playing false to his own country.

"Grandfather will be likely to sleep while I am gone," she went on, her brown eyes filling with tears as she looked on the aged sleeper. "It would kill him if father were condemned to die, and then I should die, too."

Wrapping a little faded cloak around her shoulders, Hope let herself out of the chamber, quietly secured the door, then descended the dark stairway.

As she stole cautiously along the hall, her heart in a tumult of emotions, she saw, through the half-open door leading into the kitchen, that the troopers were either asleep or heavily dozing.

This was as she wished it, for they would not know of her absence from the farmhouse. As quietly as possible she opened and shut the outer door, letting herself out into the night and cold.

Then, never pausing to see if her flight had been discovered by the guard, she ran like a frightened fawn under the trees down the hillside.

The air was growing keener every moment, and the raindrops, which now and then fell from the somber old trees on Hope's face or hands, were like ice, and made her shiver and draw her cloak more closely around her shoulders.

The night was very dark, for great, dense clouds of blackness were scudding across the sky. The merest fragment of a new moon, well down the western sky, with a few faint stars, struggled vainly to be seen and to relieve the darkness.

The night was wild and full of terrors to poor little Hope; but, summoning all her courage, she sped along the lonely path which led across the fields towards Morristown.

She had gone almost a mile from her home when she came to a stream swollen into a black torrent by the late rains.

She ran along the marshy bank until she found the place where two long planks were made to serve as a bridge for the country folks, who wished to shorten the distance to town.

Hope started across the planks spanning the stream.

"OH, DO YOU KNOW GENERAL WASHINGTON?"

Every moment the turbid, ice-cold waters rushing riverward, threatened to sweep away the supports under the planks.

But the little girl, filled with her great purpose, went dauntlessly forward.

She had reached the middle of the stream in safety, when a water-fowl arose from almost beneath her, and flew away over her very head, with wild, frightened cries.

So unexpected and sudden was its appearance that Hope started back, nervously. The planks were becoming icy where the rain was freezing on them, and before she could save herself, her feet slipped and she realized that she was falling.

But she caught the edges of the plank and held on firmly, while trying to draw herself up from the dark, gurgling current into which her feet were plunged.

The fragment of a moon freed itself from the sable clouds and dimly lighted the scene, revealing the white-faced, terror-stricken child clinging to the icy planks.

One moment she clung in awful peril, then a tall figure stepped out on the planks, and she was lifted by a pair of strong arms and carried safely to the opposite bank.

There was a strength and gentleness in the man's touch which strangely thrilled and reassured Hope.

Looking up, half shyly, as the moon continued to lend her feeble light, Hope's clear eyes scanned her rescuer.

He was tall, very erect, and wrapped in a gray cloak. There was something majestic about the man, and as Hope looked at the half-concealed face, child though she was, she was impressed with its gentle dignity and unusual force.

"My child,"—and the tall figure bent over her kindly—"it is a dark, cold night for you to be abroad. Where do you live?"

"Back there on the hill," answered Hope, pointing across the stream.

"Had you started home?" he questioned her, gently.

"No, sir. I was going to Morristown."

"Have you friends there, whom you wish to see?"

"No—yes, sir—that is—"

Hope stopped in confusion. Perhaps she was saying too much to a stranger.

The man evidently understood her, for he said, reassuringly:

"Do not mind telling me. I am your friend."

One glance into the clear eyes, bent upon her so kindly, told Hope that she might trust him implicitly.

"I have started to the American camp," she said, simply.

"What takes you there so late?"

"My troubles."

And there was a pathetic tremor in her voice, which caused the man to place a hand compassionately on her damp, dark curls.

"And whom did you hope to see there?"

"Gen. Washington."

"Gen. Washington is not in the habit of receiving visits from little girls, at such late hours," he replied, with a wondering smile in the clear, gray eyes.

"Oh!" she exclaimed, pathetically, a sense of her impropriety suddenly dawning upon her.

"Well, never mind, dear. Trust me with your troubles. I have great influence with the commander in chief, and may be able to help you."

"Oh, do you know Gen. Washington, sir?" she cried, brightening and catching one of his hands, hopefully.

"Yes, my dear child, I know him well."

"And will you tell him my troubles, and help me?" she cried, eagerly.

"I will help you. Now tell me, dear child, what has driven you forth this disagreeable night to seek Gen. Washington at his headquarters."

And he took her little, chilled hands and held them sympathetically in his warm, shapely ones.

Thus urged, Hope told her story of how news had reached the farmhouse of her father's arrest on the charge of his being a traitor, how it had affected the feeble, old grandfather, and how the troopers had come to guard their house, terrifying them with their rude behavior.

"What is your name, little one?" her listener asked, when she had finished briefly outlining her troubles.

"Hope Howell," she answered.

"And your father is—"

"Albert Howell."

"Do not worry any longer, Hope. I give you my promise that Gen. Washington will do all he can for your father."

"Oh, thank you, sir! God will be good to you. Save my father, for there is no braver soldier, no truer American, in all the colonies. Not one!" she said, with earnest, dilating eyes.

"The father of such a daughter cannot be very bad; no matter how dark is the suspicion cast upon him," remarked the man, more to himself than to Hope. "There must be some mistake. The case must receive careful attention, and without delay."

Then, as if remembering the little girl's present position of discomfort, he said:

"But, dear one, I must carry you across these slippery boards, and see you safe home."

Taking her up in his strong arms, he carried Hope safely over the stream and led her back to the farmhouse.

On the threshold he paused, saying, in his cheery way:

"Now, Hope, do you run up to your grandfather and tell him he need fear the troopers no longer. This is not a tory household."

Hope hastened to do his bidding, while her gray-cloaked friend called the sub-officer of the troopers to him.

The troopers bestirred themselves before the cozy old fireplace, exchanged startled glances, while there was a vain attempt to put a suspicious-looking jug and several mugs out of sight.

The conference in the hall between the tall figure in the long cloak and the sub-officer was short, and the trooper soon returned to his fellows.

"We are ordered back to headquarters at once," he announced. "This farmhouse needs to be guarded no longer."

The tall figure stood majestically aside, while the men filed out into the darkness and away toward the American camp.

He seemed lost in thought as he gazed after the retreating forms of the soldiers, as if his surroundings were entirely forgotten.

Presently there were light steps hurrying down the stairs, and a little hand touched his arm softly.

"Did you send them away?"

"Yes, Hope. How is your grandfather?" he asked, coming back from his reverie.

"He seemed much better when I told him of your kindness to me and what you had said."

"There is no cause for further fear, my child."

"You make me very glad, sir," she said, returning the pressure of his hand. "If you will only tell Gen. Washington about my father, I know he must find him innocent. I will love him always if he saves my father."

"He will do all he can for him, and I assure you the promise of a love such as little Hope Howell's will cheer the heart of Gen. Washington through many dark hours and nights of gloom and suffering, before we have seen the last of our enemy and complete peace and liberty are ours. God keep you, little Hope," and he stooped and imprinted a tender kiss upon the child's white brow.

Then he crossed the threshold, said: "Good night," and was gone like a tall, gray phantom down the hillside.

As Hope fastened the door, she said to herself, with sudden regret:

"Isn't he kind? And I forgot to ask his name, and now he's gone!"

The next day, as Hope was trying to interest her mind in some simple household duties, a trooper rode up to the door and placed a letter in her hands.

Running upstairs to her grandfather, she cried, joyfully:

"Listen, grandfather!"

And in a happy voice she read the followin gnote:

"It was Gen. Washington himself who promised you last night to do all he could for your father. His case has been investigated, and I am pleased to inform you that he is innocent. The real traitor in camp, jealous of the chance of promotion which had come to Albert Howell, has been discovered. It was this fellow who concealed the suspicious paper on your father's person, and cunningly connived to bring about his arrest. Of your father's promotion, which is now sure, I will not speak, for he will be with you soon and will tell you all. May the great blessing of peace and joy rest upon the Howell farmhouse and its dear inmates. GEORGE WASHINGTON."

"Isn't he good, grandfather?"

"Noble!" stroking the nut-brown curls.

No American ever revered the memory of George Washington more than little Hope Howell, nor with better cause.—A. H. Gibson, in Golden Days.

A TRUE GENTLEMAN.

Some of the Many Pleasant Things Known About George Washington.

It has been said by ardent biographers that George Washington came the nearest to being a faultless man of any known to the world. He was a gentleman in the truest meaning of the word. Much stress is laid upon the simplicity of his life and manners, and some would make us believe that he dressed like a plain farmer and ate only the simplest viands.

But Washington was a man who had been reared in elegance and knew how to maintain the dignity of his position, and he dressed and lived consistently. In the "Young American's Library of Famous Generals" we are given this description of the Father of our Country in the words of Mrs. Washington's relative, Mr. Custis:

"You will meet an old gentleman riding along in plain drab clothes, a broad-brimmed hat, a hickory switch in his hand and carrying an umbrella with a long staff, which is attached to his saddle-bow; that, sir, is Gen. Washington."

That is one picture of the general and very likely a true one, suited to his surroundings. Here is another, which is a charming and chivalrous counterpart:

"At the presidential reception Gen. Washington wore his hair powdered and gathered behind in a silk bag. His coat and breeches were of plain black velvet. He wore a white or pearl-colored vest and yellow gloves, and a cocked hat in his hand, with silver knee and shoe buckles, and a long sword with a finely wrought and glittering steel hilt. The coat was worn over this and its scabbard of finely polished white leather."

In regard to his diet there was the same diversity. We are told that he rose at daybreak, lit his own fire and wrote or read by candlelight. In summer he breakfasted at seven and in winter at eight, when he drank two small cups of tea and ate three or four cakes of Indian meal (hoe cakes). Dinner at two, when he drank small beer or cider and two glasses of old Madeira.

Why Gen. Washington should make his own fire does not seem very clear. The house was well supplied with servants, dower slaves, who had been raised by Martha Washington's family. In 1797 Washington wrote:

"I wish from my soul that the legislature of this state could see the policy of a gradual abolition of slavery. It might prevent much future mischief."

Prophetic words indeed!

Washington was inclined to be courteously sarcastic. One speech of his to the English officers who represented the enemy at the battle of Bunker Hill is characteristic. The American army was short of ammunition at Prospect Hill and for some time the cannonading of the enemy was answered by an occasional rally which seemed to betoken weakening. This was the answer Washington made to a storm of cannon balls: "Our poverty in ammunition prevents our making a suitable return."

It is said there are only two portraits of Gen. Washington that represent the man as he really was. One is the equestrian portrait by Trumbull in 1790, a copy of which is in the city hall of New York. The other an engraving by Loisler from a painting by Cogniet, both French artists of distinction. The head of the portrait was copied from Stuart, but the limbs are believed to be the most perfect of any representation.

It is said of Washington that not one act of cruelty was ever laid to his charge.

At the age of twenty-seven Washington was married to the beautiful and amiable widow Custis, the earliest representative among the ladies prominent in our republican society. We are told of Martha Washington that her superior mind and education, her virtues of character, and her majestic grace commanded general respect. She read a great deal; Milton and the Scriptures were her constant companions.

An incident is related which is illustrative of Washington's religious habits. A visitor in the halls of congress asked how he could distinguish Mr. Washington, of Virginia. The reply was: "You will know him easily when congress is at prayer. Mr. Washington is the gentleman who kneels down."

When Napoleon met one of our countrymen abroad, he was sure to ask: "How is the great American, Washington?"—Mrs. M. L. Rayne, in Detroit Free Press.

An Old City.

Old cities are not common in the West. In the eastern states of the Union are places which boast quite a respectable antiquity for the New World, but outside of the original thirteen colonies, most cities have been founded within the last half century. A notable exception among the larger Western cities is St. Louis. The first recorded settlement, in the way of laying out a town was by Pierre Laclede Liguest, a Frenchman, in Feb., 1764. At the time he supposed he was taking possession of the site in the interest of his native country. It was not until some months afterwards that he learned of the Treaty of Paris, in the previous year, by which the territory west of the Mississippi was ceded to Spain. In 1800 it became French again, until the financial necessities of Napoleon compelled him to sell it to the United States for $12,000,000, a purchase for which Thomas Jefferson was roundly abused at the time. Now, St. Louis is one of the most beautiful, prosperous and stately cities in the Union. To reach it for business or pleasure, The Burlington, with its line skirting the Mississippi, is the only route worth considering. —Next Monday the 22nd of February is the anniversary of the birth of George Washington, the United States' first President.

—C. W. Ingerson President of the Board of Eduction has a cat that is just convalescing from an attack of chickenpox.

—The Delano Cornet Band will give a musical and Dramatic Entertainment at the City Hall, on Tuesday evening, March 1st, 1892.

—The Delano Produce Co. have built a new ice house and filled it with ice for summer use. They are paying cash for produce.

—The village council held their last regular meeting on Monday evening. Routine business was transacted and the question of buying a piano for the hall was laid over.

—The Ladies' Aid supper held at the City Hall last Friday evening was as usual an enjoyable affair and with the dinner given next day, took in $25.75.

—Read the Notice to Teachers of examinations to be held. Every teacher should attend as many examinations as possible as there is no better method of brightening up the rusty spots in ones store of knowledge.

—Earl Hoisington, of Independence was in town yesterday. He says there are a lot of people fool enough to think that whiskey must be sold in order for the government to derive a tax, consequently saloons are kept in existance.

—August Berneck is at work on a commodious barn on the west side of the river, which he will use the coming summer. August has taken more intrest in improving the horses of this neighborhood than any other man and deserves credit for the same.

—On Saturday evening about 7 o'clock, a strange phenomenon occurred. The sky was red and the color was so strong as to give a crimson tinge to the snow covering the ground. The appearance of a grand red light illuminating the surrounding country was presented.

—The case of State of Minnesota vs. Ben Albitz charged by Lizzie Gueitka with indecent liberties was brought before Justice Bohn and a change of venue taken to Justice W. H. Mapes at Montrose where the defendent was required to give bonds in the sum of $300. awaiting the action of the grand jury, which he did. Cutting and O'Hair appearing for the State; Billings and Eaton for defendant.

—The Eagle suggests that it would be a good plan for the Town Supervisors to publish a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the town for the past year. This far we agree and think it would be a satisfaction to the voters and other interested parties to have the privilege of reading a statement of each town in the county. We doubt, however, if many of them would be very similar to that of the Delano School Board.

—On Saturday evening after a short illness, "Con" O'Leary, one of Delano's best known citizens, died. He was an old settler in the west part of Hennepin county where he lived with the family until a few years ago, when he came into the village. He held the office of constable and at one time was street commisioner. The fine piece of road between the Railroad bridge and the Woodland road south of the track, on Watertown street, will remain for years as a monument of his services in that capacity. "Con" had his faults, but has passed to the hereafter. He leaves an aged mother, two brothers, and four sisters to mourn his early death he being in the prime of life, 32 years old and of fine physic, standing considerably over six feet in height and well proportioned. The sorrowing family have the sympathy of a large circle of friends.

—"Historical Facts" by Hon. B. F. Christleib, of Long Lake, has been appearing in every issue of the GAZETTE since January 1. They are written with the utmost care as to the correctness of the incidents mentioned, Mr. C. visiting the most interested parties personally where he can and obtaining from their own lips or the lips of their intimate friends or neighbors "Historical Facts" where they are to be a component part. He has been to Delano several times and this village being within the scope of country he is writing about, between Minneapolis and Crow River Forks, or the region north of Lake Minnetonka, it will come in for a place. As the historian is a surveyor and was at one time in the employ of the R. R. company owning the line through this place and took an active part in the early history of the place, he will doubtless give us some interesting points on the birth of Delano. This week is about our neighbors in Independence and Greenwood. Next week will be a continuence of Greenwood and Delano. Look out for it and if you wish to preserve the early history of this section keep your GAZETTE or clip out the articles and paste them in your scrap book. We have a few back numbers on hand for those desiring to commence at the first, January 1.

—Leon Frazee and family have returned to Delano. They will occupy J. E. Brothers' house.

—Several of the Delano ladies are out this week canvassing for a "dime" to put your name on a quilt to send to an "old maid" in Siam, who is a missionary and who expects to be married soon. They appear to be meeting with great success, and if all the dimes are put together it ought to make a covering large enough for her and her partner.

John Stafford, who never fails to thrill his hearers with admiration, both for himself and the Gospel of Christ, exceeded himself, preaching two excellent and soul stirring sermons. The occasion will not be soon forgotten in Montrose.

World's Fair Notes.

Regulations for exhibitors in the several Departments of the Exposition have been issued and can be obtained by all intending exhibitors by applying for them, either in person or by mail.

The enormous steel trusses to sustain the roof of the Manufactures Building are about to be erected. These trusses are the lagest ever made for architectural purposes. They span 368 feet and rise to a height of 211 feet The contract for them calls for about $460.000.

A Berlin dispatch states that Emperor William is greatly interested in Germany making a fine exhibit at the Exposition, and that he has personally urged Krupp, the noted gun-maker and Schlutow, manager of the shipbuilding works at Stettin, to exhibit the latest and best products of their vast industries.

The Society for the Promotion of Physical Culture and Correct Dress has applied for nineteen hundred square feet of floor space in the Woman's Building to make an exhibit. The exhibition by the society will be by means of statuary, photographs, pictures, and cases containing costumes. The application says as the aims of the society are educational it would prefer not beiug classed with reforms or charities.

A parade, parcipitated in by 24,000 bicyclists, may be a sight at the Exposition. Efforts are being made to bring about the result.

The Horticultural Department of the Exposition is planning to have a magnificent rose garden in which will be fully 5,000 plants, besides large groups in special areas. This garden will be of a classic design with temples, arbors, archways, and trellises.

County Cullings.

The County Commissioners will meet on the 24th inst., at Buffalo.

Old Settlers meeting on the 22nd at Buffalo. Every old settler should try if the weather is fine to be on hand and renew "ould acquaintances".

From an exchange we learn that W. H. Hellen formerly editor of the Buffalo Journal is traveling in the interest of the Detrot Free Press. If Editor Eaton and the President of the Old Settler's Society are not careful they may receive offers to become contributers.

For several years the Republicans have kept half a dozen or more papers running in our county disseminating Republican views among her voters, and as a rule whenever a democrat began to show the least symptoms of becoimng prominent among the voters or office holders, or advanced any ideas concerning public questions he has been sat down upon by one or more, of these organs until many of as good men as the county affords have been kept in the back grounds and crowded out of public offices of honor and trust which they would honor had they the chance, and the people who live far enough from them to have slight or no acquaintance with them are led to beleive individuals and in some instances almost entire communities are, "hoodlums" "drunkards" "dishonerable" "dishonest in office" "ignoramuses" "imbiciles" and various and numerous otherdisreputable beings, when as a matter of fact the only thing that distinguishes them from their associates is the fact that they vote the democratic ticket.

The Wright County Times winds up an article headed "A shining Illustration", comparing the administrations of Cleveland and Harrison in regard to issuing patents to agricultural settlers with the remark that "There is not a farmer west of the Ohio river would vote the Democratic ticket if he fairly understood the operation of the office at Washington under the Democratic admistration of Grover Cleveland." Just why the Times thinks the farmers west of the Ohio are any more apt to think as he does than those east of that stream, we don't know, nor are we aware which end of that noble stream she counts from, the east end down in the old "keystone" state or the mouth at Cairo, among the "succors" or over on the "puke" side where it bucks up against the western bank of the Mississippi. Probably he means the western terminus, as there would not be so many of the farmers to convince. If the dispenser of knowledge concerning the great wrongs done by Grover Cleveland in his land office, at Washington, believes what he says and is a good republican it appears to us he is derilict in his duty to party and to the farmers "west of the Ohio" if he dont use his utmost endeavors to make them understand just how this land office was run.

The Alliance Again.

EDITOR OF THE GAZETTE.—A rejoinder in the WAVERLY TRIBUNE in reply to ours in the BUFFALO GAZETTE was kind and courteous which is characteristic of the editor. We know the editor to be a person of much intelligence and a reader and thinker on economics, but we can not help thinking that men with ability, good thinkers, when they are working for party organs, lower their standard to the views and interests of a crowd of office seekers, venial politicians and the moneyed interests on which they depend to help them into power. This question presents itself to my mind. Are we free to express our honest opinions on public questions if we are depending on the public for a living? We know that great minds have dragged the muses in the mire to please the reigning king or his favorities. We wish to inform the editor that our views on economics are not with the Alliance platform except in the Government ownership of the means of transportation and communication and equal rights to all. We do not favor the Sub-Treasury because we do not believe in any scheme that would favor a class. The wrong in our present financial system is that it favors the capitalist at the expense of the industrial classes. That good old Democrat, Andrew Jackson, was an enemy to the National banking system. The idea we opposed was, that the farmer should not look for a system of finance run in his interest, but it was all right that the capitalist should be favored. We have always noticed that the reform planks in the platform of the old parties are used only where they do not touch capitalists or their interests. The party that is now in power is perhaps controled more by the moneyed interest because it has been longer in power in National affairs; but we fail to see any difference in local affairs when a change is made in parties.

Mr. Tanner informs us that the larger number of agriculturalists belong to the old parties. Admitting that statement to be true, we think that is nothing against the Alliance. Nor is it argument in favor of the old parties. But a very few years before the anti-slavery party carried the U. S. election its numbers were few and the majority looked upon them as fanatics.

Looking over the pages of history we notice that few if any corrupt institutions were ever reformed from within themselves. It was not always a perfect principle or party that broke or limited the power of those institutions but the reformer always carried some truth that lives on and is the progressive force in civilization. The reformers are at the beginning of their work, few in number but the truth they hold, no matter how little will prove to be like the mustard seed in the gospel.

The agitation of social questions by the industrial classes during the last few years has forced the old institutions to recognize their power and consequently their rights to some extent and if the old parties make concessions it is because these forces compel them.

I do not agree with them who say we must have corruption in public places because it always was there, but we must say that the institution is all right though we know it is not. Truth seems to be made to preach but not to practice.

We call ours a Christian civilization profess thereby to be followers of Him who gave us the foundation of his doctrine, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God and thy neighbor as thyself" and we follow the doctrine, "Everyone for himself and the devil take the hindmost."

Ridicule is the strongest weapon known to mankind. It will turn from principle men that the sword of persecution can not move. This weapon used in holding in contempt the class that does the useful, honest labor together with that animal instinct in our being which seeks our ease at the expense of others has driven men into hundreds of dishonest and what should be called disreputable ways of making a living but which ways have public sanction if they are successful until there is perhaps not more than one fifth of our people doing useful honest work.

Mr. Tanner refers me to the Michigan Farmers' Grange. He states that they are as fine a body of farmers as is to be found in the United States. How does he know this? If the resolutions adopted by them is a specimen of their best thought we have not a very exalted opinion of their knowledge. Is it worse to issue money to the industrial classes than to the scheming idlers?

If the ebitor does not know the A, B, C of finance and is waiting for me to inform him, why does he criticize the sub-treasury? How can he do so fairly? My knowledge of finance is very limited bua I think I know the A, B, C, at least in the big letters. I have all the educating I am able to handle at present.

M. E. BENNETT.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch:
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired:
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

GOOD ENOUGH.

Dear boys, I want to give you
A motto safe and good;
'Twill make your life successful
If you heed it as you should,
Obey it to the letter—
Dont say a thing is "good enough"
Till it can be no better.

And whether at your lessons,
Or at daily work,
Don't be a half-way dabbler—
Dont slip and slide and shirk,
And think it doesn't matter
That such talk is "trash" and "stuff"—
For until your task is perfect
It is never "Good enough"

If your work is in the schoolroom,
Make every lesson tell;
No matter what you mean to be,
Build your foundation well.
Every knotty point and problem
That you bravely master now
Will increase your skill to labor
With the pen or with the plow.

If you sweep a store or stable,
Be sure you go behind
Every box and bale and counter;
It will pay, you'll always find,
To be careful, patient, thorough,
Though the work be hard and rough
And when you've done your very best,
'Twill then be "good enough".

So you'd better take my motto,
If you ever mean to work
To any station higher
Than a stable boy or clerk,
It will make you independent,
It will make you no man's debtor;
They never say "It's good enough"
Till it can be no better.

WM. QUINN, Chairman Democratic County Com.

MINNESOTA'S climate seems to have slid up from the south a few degrees for several winters past until now we have rain every month in the year. We have heard no one charge this change to Prof. Dyrenforths and his rain producing bombs either. Dr. Fish has been lecturing throughout our state though and he claims to have been one of the original predictors that rain would some time be produced by artificial means.

Republican-Alliance-Democrat

The BUFFALO GAZETTE appeals to the Democrats of Wright county to call town and village caucuses for the purpose of nominating a straght party ticket for local officers. The Tribune has no sympathy whatever with narrowness of this description. Town and village officers should be chosen regardless of political affiliations and with a sole view to personal fitness. Get the best men and don't sacrifice a good ticket to narrow party prejudice. A competent Republican is preferable to an incompetent Democrat and the best way is to sandwich in Democrats, Republicans, and Alliance men promiscuously. If rigid party lines are drawn at town meetings, efficientcy will be sacrificed to partisanship and no glory can be won in such a contest as that.—Waverly Tribune.

We could not expect the Tribune to do much different from this except that he does not stop where he intimates, with town and village offices but carries it on up high as he gets. When a delegate to the Democratic county convention he nominated John Alley, a Republican for Judge of Probate. Has the Democratic party no man able to discharge the duties of that office and distribute the printing as conscieuciously for his party good as that gentleman? When a delegate to the Democratic Legislative Convention he favored making no nomination for Senator but endorsing the People's ticket and now we can sit idly by while our Senator, A. Y. Eaton, casts his ballot for U. S. Senator for a man not even the choice of his own party in the district he represents. Could we have fared worse? When a delegate to the last Democratic State convention his voice was for Owens, the Alliance candidate for governor of the State. That is just what is the matter with Wright County politics. There are too many men who want office or want to down the other fellows regardless of principles. If a party has principles it should stand by them. As for filling the offices mention we presume Mr. Tanner would be loth to admit that he as a Democrat could not do justice to the office of Judge of Probate. While Mr. Bull could hold the office of Senator as creditably to our county as can the Hon. A. Y. while he doubtless knows no reason why Judge Thomas Wilson could not act as governor as well as could his choice, Mr. Owens.

OLD SETTLERS' RE-UNION.

A Big Day at Buffalo.

Once a year as the anniversary of the birth of the father of our country comes around the old settlers of Wright county come together at the county seat and in company of each other and of their children and friends, unite in celebrating the time when years ago they came into the very midst of the big woods and settling along the branches of the Crow or on the banks of the beautiful lakes with which our county is dotted, with the red man for their neighbor erected a log cabin and cleared up a farm on which to make a future home for them and their families.

On Monday last the day was observed at Buffalo in a splendid manner, Dudley's Hall being unequal to the task of holding the crowd of old and new, big and little settlers that came from all parts of the county far and near, on sleighs and in buggies and wagons to attend the annual meeting. Not a few from outside the county were present and participated in the enjoyment of the occasion.

The program was carried out as follows:

Music, Buffalo orchestra.

Anthem by the Buffalo Choir. 17 voices gave evidence of considerable musical ability in the county seat.

Prayer in the absence of Rev. Thomas Gunn was made by Rev. Chris, of Monticello.

Secretary Farnham then read the business portion of the minutes of last meeting and a part of the constitution adopted in 1868 and signed by 210 old settlers in which it was made one of the many duties of the society to hold an annual re-union, preserve matters of historical interest, etc., etc.

Song by the Monticello Glee Club, 8 voices.

C. M. King in response to "Our Country" said, that having been selected at a late date to fill a vacancy on the program of course he would be expected to make a short talk on a long subject. If he said anything that would cause more love for the old flag, more reverence for country, he would feel satisfied. We are not enemies of monarchies, but we don't believe in one man power, or having power on account of birth. That the king can do no harm. Our country is based on the idea of equal rights to all before the law. No lunatic can become a ruler here. No babbling infant, doting libertine or drunken debauchee becomes our leader. Our government is founded on the rock constitution. 46 units compose the country, inspired by patriotism. Washington and Jefferson established a government of equality, the admiration of Christendom. The speaker gave an interesting account of a trip to Boston where he visited scenes of revolutionary fame and counted the cost to establish this country and then related what he saw in the south where the conflict of the blue and grey left on the battlefield remains where was seen the glowworm shining from the sightless orbits where once gleamed the fires of patriotism. Then I thought how much did it cost to sustain this nation. Is this nation worth what it cost to establish it? Is it worth what it cost to sustain it? Each man and child answers yes.

The speaker was roundly applauded at the close of an unusually eloquent and appropriate speech, even for him whose fame is already abroad in the land as one of Wright county's most gifted orators.

A song, America, by the Buffalo Quintette club was next in order.

"The Farmer and the Press" was talked about for a short time by C. L. Smith, of Minneapolis. The speaker said he almost always has something to say. He gave the farmers some good sound advice in regard to reading up on their business. He advised them to read good papers and magazines and keep up to the times, said he loved good fresh eggs but detested bad ones and some newspapers reminded him of each kind. Farming has been reduced to a science. Don't seek advice from a man who tells you he never made a cent at the business in his life. Quite a number of babies seemed to be trying who could holler the loudest during Mr. S's. remarks and as the speaker closed his address he took occasion to brag a little on our best wheat, toughest horses and hogs that could bear the microscopical inspections of foreign scientists but nothing else can compare with the girls and boys of our country after all. They should be provided with reading matter of the best kinds. He said he had exceeded his time but if he ever got another chance at them he would assure them that he would not stop short of two hours.

Miss Blanche Desmond rendered Will Carlton's, "Old Settlers Story" in good style and wes encored, returning she recited a comical piece concerning "Babies". Miss Desmond's recitations were applauded by everyone.

The Buffalo Glee Club sang a medley and were encored, giving a part of the medley the second time.

Mrs. A. S. Beede, of Rockford read an essay. Subject, Washington. Mrs. B's. reputation as an essayist is already established and it is but fair to say she sustained it on this occasion. Though some would have preferred the modern style to the scriptural for the subject treated.

The recitation, "Gettysburg Hills", by H. L. Gordon, was rendered by Miss Dixie Smith, of Minneapolis, in good style and was well received giving as it did the deeds of the old 1st Minnesotas two hundred and fifty going in, but 47 coming out of the battle, the balance dead or wounded on Gettysburg's plain.

George Florida was on hand and called the attention of the audience to the antidiluvian period when Wright county was among the first earth to raise out of the depths of the waters and on down, through the silurian, carboniferous and other geological changes to the mound builders who once lived near Rockford and from whose mounds now in existence there, a massive form had been exhumed, by modern ghouls, who had a jaw like a politician or an editor. George sang an ode to the patient and much abused ox, old Bright and Broad were highly complimented, the audience joining in the song to the tune of old John Brown. The orator kept digging at Mr. Stacy about his sleighriding with the girls in pioneer days, the ox furnishing the means of locomotion. Conrad Marth, one of Franklin's flourishing farmers was complimented for his part taken in the building up of Rockford while he engineered the motive power, the noble ox. Mr. Florida should have procured a yoke or two of the time honored quadrupeds to haul that load of fair ones he took up to the old settlers meeting with him.

The "Song of the Ducks", the boys' chorous, Arthur Young, Rev. Davis and other exercises added to the interest of the meeting, the program of which had to be cut short for want of time. An election of officers was then had which resulted in the election of the old officers and committee on program.

A highly enjoyable time was had by all and old acquaintances and friendships renewed.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

GREENWOOD, Continued.

The following settlers located in Greenwood in the latter part of the year 1855, namely; Kelsey Hinman after disposing of his claim near Maxwell's Bay to Allen Grave, (see Orono 1855) re-located on land now owned by John Omeara and John Moffat the son of Job Moffat who remained on the latter's claim on Pioneer Creek during his (the latters) absence of the winter of 1854-5 as previously stated located on land now occupied by Rev. —— McLain; and Charles Astrope second son of Thomas Astrope (see Independence 1855) settled near the west end of Lake Sarah in section 33, the latter location being near that of his father and brother in Independence.

The following settlers mostly Germans located in the northerly part of Greenwood during the latter part of 1855 namely: Conrad Lutz, Charles Ende, Conrad Neil, Henry Groehling, August Kuehn, F. Lieder, Henry Schnappauf, John Russell and a Canadian Frenchman named Amable Coe.

Amongst these settlers were several experienced hunters and trappers namely: J. M. Burt A. G. Sexton, Samuel Allen, Pompey Rider, and —— Deibal and during the winter of 1855-56 pursued those vocations, who with the exception of Allen occupied a cabin on the west side of Crow River, opposite Greenwood. ——Deibal was an Indian trader at different times in his life and was murdered by the Indians at Yellow medicine during the Indian outbreak of 1862. Thomas Holmes was a pioneer of much experience, especially in the matter of laying out and beginning towns on the frontier and previous to his operations at Greenwood, he was associated with the laying out of Jaynesville, Wisconsin, and Shakopee and Chaska, afterwards he laid out the town named for him Holmes City. He was one of many parties who on the influx of settlers into Minnesota in 1855 and succeeding years, projected and laid out towns in anticipation of each becoming a great nucleus of population and wealth in the future which operations were carried on with as much enthusiasm as that manifested by the boomer of the closing decade of the present century.

DELANO-1855.

The first settlement of Delano and vicinity was made by J. Bruce White, James P. Lyle and John C. Ellis during the summer of 1855. They came to that place by way of Minneapolis, Wayzata and Green wood over the road opened by Garrison, Moffat and Young to Greenwood from this latter place they found their locations by following the banks of the south forks of Crow River, where the only affairs in the shape of roads were trails or paths, beaten not only by the aboriginees but by the wild animals who occupied the forest with them. They were followed later by Samuel and James Patton, Volney Walters, Luther Walters (father of Volney) Luther Cunningham, David White and family amongst whom were Lemuel and Herbert White and Miss Matilda White who removed there in December 1855. J. Bruce White and Mrs. James P. Lyle, deceased, were alsy children of David White. Theses settlers improved the dwellings hurriedly erected, by lumber which they manufactured by means of a whip saw. These settlers opened a road during the winter of 1855-6 eastward to road opened by J. D. Young intersecting the latter at John R McGary's place. It was over this route in connection with the road from Minneapolis by Wayzata and Moffat's, that the pioneers of Watertown travelled on establishing and making a settlement at that townsite during the same winter.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, Feb. 19, 1892.

Representative Springer, chairman of the Ways and Means committee, and Representative Bland, chairman of the Coinage committee, both assured your correspondent that there was not the slightest foundation for the stories that have been recently told about these committees antagonizing each other on the floor of the House. Mr. Bland says that himself and all the rest of the free coinage democrats are just as anxious to see the bills passed putting wool, cotton, ties, and binding twine on the free list, which have been prepared by the Ways and Meaes committee, as they are to pass the free coinage bill, and that they have never had any intention of antagonizing any of them. They only ask that a time be set for the consideration of the free coinage bill, and they will utter no complaint if the Committee on Rules decide that their bill be taken up after the tariff bills are passed.

The story that Mr. Mills intended offering an entire tariff bill as a substitute for the first one of the tariff bills taken up by the House, had just as little foundation. Mr. Mills has no idea of doing anything of the kind. He favors each of the bills prepared by the Ways and Means Committee, the only difference of opinion between himself and the majority of the committee being that he would like to see the entire tariff reformd at one time, instead of going at it by piecemeals. He will heartily support each of the bills as steps in the right direction

Congress, or as many of its members as can spare the time from important committee work, will leave here for Chicago tonight, as guests of the World's Fair committee of that city, returning next Wednesday morning.

Representative Rayner, of Maryland, this week delivered one of the strongest speeches against trusts ever heard on the floor of the House. He reminded the Republicans that neither the Interstate Commerce law nor the Sherman act, passed at the last session of Congress, had prevented the continued formation of the trusts and combinations which it was their alleged purpose to eradicate; that trusts still blossomed and flourished as they accumulated in every commercial center; that they still defied the law and the jurisdiction and mandates of the courts, and that they still, with arrogant front and bold pretentions, executed their purposes without the slightest fear of inflicted punishment or the slightest concern about any encroachment upon their prerogative. They are so powerful and influential that the legislatures of the States seem to tremble at their presence, and the Congress of the United States had stood by with folded hands and permitted them, with an iron heel, to trample upon the rights of the people.

The committee to investigate the Pension Office has had a room assigned it in the capitol building, and it will hold daily sittings of several hours until its work is completed. Representatives Cooper, of Indiana, and Enloe, of Tennessee, will assume the positions of prosecutors, they being thoroughly familiar with most of the charges brought against the bureau. Chairman Wheeler, of the investigation committee, says he enters upon the investigation without prejudice, and that he will be governed entirely by the evidence presented to the committee.

The House committee on Manufacrures has designated Messrs J. D. Warner, M. D. Egan, Sherman Hoar and Ezra Taylor a sub-committee to conduct the investigation of the "sweating system", authorized by resolution of the House. Mr. Sherman Hoar will act as Secretary to the sub-committee, and he will be glad to hear from any persons desiring to aid in finding out about this business. It is expected that the first hearing before the committee will take place the latter part of next week.

The House adopted a resolution calling upon the Postmaster General for information relating to contracts made under the ocean mail subsidy act.

Representative Enloe is the author of the resolution, and he wishes to use the information asked for in preparing an argument in favor of his bill for the repeal of the subsidy act, which he is confident will be passed by the House.

Democratic absentees are giving the leaders of the House a great deal of trouble, and now that the serious business of the session is getting before the House the continuation of this practice will prove very embarassing, as it enables the Republicans to tie the House up at any time by refusing to vote, thus breaking a quorum, as was done several times this week.

The Indian appropriation bill, which is $10.415,055 less than the one passed last year, which carried $9.614,898 to pay for lands purchased from various tribes, is now being considered by the House. No time has been set to close debate upon it.

DEMOCRATIC CALL.

Tuesday, June 21, Officially Named for the Convention.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—The Democratic national convention today issued the following call:

The national Democratic committee, at a meeting held this day, in the city of Washington, D. C., has appointed Tuesday, the 21st day of June, 1892, as the time and chosen the city of Chicago as the place for holding the national Democratic convention. Each state is entitled to a representation therein equal to double the number of representation to which it is entitled in the next electoral college, and each territory and the District of Columbia shall have two delegates. All Democratic conservatives, citizens of the United States, irrespective of past political associations and differences, who can unite with us in the effort for pure, economical and constitutional government are cordially invited to join us in sending delegates to the convention.

CALVIN S. BRICE, Chairman,
SIMON P. SHEERIN Secretary.

MRS. TEL SOKO, said to be Japan's first woman lawyer, is in this country lecturing in behalf of a Christian school for high caste Japanese girls.

THE retirement of Gens. John M. Schofield and O. O. Howard will take out of the active service, it is said, every regular army officer who commanded a corps during the civil war.

PROF. UPTON, of Brown university, has taken a measurement of the largest spot on the sun and finds it to be 18,000 miles in diameter. To some extent this may be called a mere speck.

THE salary of the czar of Russia is said to be $25,000 a day. He ought to be able to spend one winter at a three-dollar a week boarding-house and give the balance of his income to sufferers.

A COLORADO man was matrimonially engaged to twelve girls in as many different states, and he died. If he had reached the unlucky number thirteen, his death would have caused no surprise.

HABITUAL drunkards are cared for in an effective way in Norway and Sweden. The penalty is imprisonment, and during incarceration they are fed on bread and wine, no water being allowed.

DINAH CYR, a Fall River (Mass.) woman, has been sent to the insane asylum because she has queer notions, one of which is her disinclination to talk. In any other section of the country this would have marked her as a treasure which every wife-seeker would have striven to win.

THE wizard, Edison, is trying to get telephonic communication with the sun, and claims that when it is established he will be able to hear the spots break out on the sun. He will next transfer this to his phonograph and the boys will be able to drop a nickel in slot and hear old Sol roar.

IT is reported as probable that the recent fire in the Hotel Royal in New York city originated in the elevator shaft, where the engineer used a lighted candle to hunt for a leak in the gas fixture. By the help of the candle the engineer found the leak, and twenty human lives were destroyed.

GEN. BUTLER thinks that Mr. Lincoln had but one fault—and that was a virtue—he had such great kindness of heart that he could not punish criminals. The general had tried his best to make Mr. Lincoln hang deserters, but the president could not be brought to do it. As a result of his clemency there was at the close of the war an army of deserters numbering more than 177,000.

JUDGE WHEELER, of the United States circuit court in New York, having been called upon for a decision as to whether corsets are to be scheduled as clothing or mechanical contrivances, has written an opinion in which, with becoming modesty, he says: "I think they are clothing. I am not, however, very confident about it." This isn't the kind of judicial ruling that stays are usually granted upon.

OLD things are passing away. The village lyceum, the sewing society, the donation party, the singing-school are things almost unknown in the present tense; the old town-meeting, so vaunted as the "school of citizenship," is a mere phantom of its past; even election day, with its booths and mechanisms of secret voting, has for the public weal expelled the yeomen from that ancient meeting-place, the town hall.

DO YOU wish to know whether your butter is just plain butter or the more euphonious oleomargarine? Put it in the sun for a little while, and smell the residuum. A gentleman exposed to the solar rays recently butter for which he had paid thirty cents a pound, and when he put his nose to the remainder of the compound it recalled the days when as a boy he worked in a tallow factory. And still there are state inspectors of dairy products.

GRANVILLE WOODS, a colored man, has made a successful invention, just now attracting large attention in the east. It is in the method of supplying electrical energy to moving cars and trains. The cars, by his new system, will be supplied with power through wire brushes which make connections with "heads" from underground conducting lines. There will be no exposed wires. A test made in New York was eminently successful. It is the first notable invention of a colored man in electrical engineering.

THE purchase of Alaska has already proved to be a pretty good speculation, goods being exported from that country last year to the value of over $1,000,000 in excess of the price paid to Russia for the territory, and the resources of the country seem to be far from fully known yet. Capt. De Haas, who has just returned to Tacoma after a two years' mining tour in Alaska, says that a very profitable business in canning wild geese and ducks could be established and carried on at the mouth of the Yukon river. These birds, he says, gather there in immense numbers in the spring.

WHILE the persistent, unrelaxing work of our fathers and forefathers made possible the development which has marked out industrial history the past fifty years, there is no doubt that our fathers and forefathers worked too hard. The same holds true to the men of the present day. A glance at the increase in insanity shows that overwork has become a national vice. While it is good for man to work, it is barely possible that the American has underestimated the economic value of rest and recreation. It is better for a man to so divide his labors that he can live a little by the wayside.

MUCH of the significance of Valentine day has been lost, but it is still a good day and is enjoyed by thousands of the young people of the world. St. Valentine was a bishop who lived over sixteen centuries ago. He was a good man devoted to charity and love. At about 270 he was beheaded by order of the Roman emperor Claudius, who hated him for his Christianity. The canonized bishop early became the patron saint of lovers, and has held that distinction all these years. During these latter days the comic picture makers have destroyed a great deal of the beauty and romance of the day.

LATER.

Youthful Cannibals.

ATLANTA, Ga., Feb. 22.—News of a horrible story of murder and cannibalism near Day's Mill, has been received. Lucy President, a degraded and idiotic negro woman, left her home and nine-months-old infant in charge of her two elder children, Mark and Linda, aged eleven and nine years. She went to the place of Mr. J. A. Knight, two miles distant, to do some work for Mrs. Knight.

After her departure it seems that Mark resolved upon putting the infant out of the way, so he told his sister what he proposed doing, at the same time telling her that if she told he would kill her. Procuring an axe, he deliberately knocked the child in the head and mangled its body in different places. They afterwards ate some of the flesh. When the mother returned and found what had been done she did show the least sign of maternal grief.

HEARTLESS LYNCHERS.

They Capture a Rapist in Arkansas, Tie Him to a Tree and Drench Him with Kerosene—His Victim Applies the Torch and He Is Burned to Death.

TEXARKANA, Ark., Feb. 22.—Five thousand people stood on the public street Saturday afternoon and with sullen faces, unmoved by anything savoring of pity, watched while Ed Coy, a negro, was burned to death for criminally assaulting Mrs. Henry Jewell last Saturday. Mrs. Jewell is the young wife of a respectable farmer living 2 miles south of town, and since his crime Coy succeeded in eluding the officers until Saturday morning, when he was discovered at the home of Ed Gaines (colored) 4 miles north of here. He had a mistress at the home of Gaines, and it was she who disclosed his hiding place.

After his capture by a posse he was conveyed to the Jewell farm where Mrs. Jewell, without hesitation, identified him beyond all doubt as the man who assaulted her. The trembling wretch was then returned to town and placed in a room with a number of guards. A heavy guard was also placed outside the building, it being resolved that he should not be disposed of until all the posses that were still out should be called in.

All the posses were in by 2 o'clock, and the leaders, after a consultation, decided to hang the negro to a telegraph pole on Broad street, at the state line, the most public place in the city. Coy was accordingly marched to this point with a view to carry out this programme, but when the crowd saw the rope and divined that hanging had been decided upon there were thunders of protests.

"Away with the ropel Hanging is too good for him! Burn him! burn him!" was the shout that went up from 5,000 throats. The leaders soon saw the futility of opposing the wishes of the mob, but begged that the deed should take place out of town, and to this the crowd agreed. Half trotting and half running the crowd rushed the doomed wretch along with them east on Clinton street, thence south on College Hill street until the Iron Mountain railroad track had been crossed. Here there is a beautiful grass plot of three or four acres void of timber or shubbery, save one tree, 18 inches in diameter and broken off at the top.

Coy was strapped to the body of the tree with iron fastenings and coal oil was poured over his entire person in liberal quantities. There was a moment of silence and then another shout went up:

"Let Mrs. Jewell apply the match! Let Mrs. Jewell set him off!"

Walking slowly, very pale but collected, the woman emerged from the crowd. Her appearance before them set the crowd wild and a mighty cheer went up that almost shook the ground on which they were standing. The crowd fell back at her approach, making a pathway for the brutal negro's victim, who, leaning on the arm of a male relative on either side, walked unhesitatingly forward to where the negro stood pinioned, struck a parlor match and with the utmost deliberation fired the negro's clothes in two places.

In a second the poor wretch was one mass of flames, but even then his wonderful nerve, exhibited ever since his arrest, never forsook him, and while suffering the tortures of fire he actually called to the men of the assembly and in a clear voice requested of them: "Move back so that the ladies can see." He referred to the negro women, a large number of whom witnessed the execution.

The flames shot high above his head, curling in waves about his body and limbs. Coy set his teeth, and throughout the hideous ordeal made little noise, only uttering a few groans. He died in about twenty minutes after Mrs. Jewell set him on fire.

The excitement over the horrible affair having largely subsided, the people are coming to their sober senses, and general regret is expressed. That Coy should have been hanged or shot is generally admitted by everybody, but burning the poor wretch at the stake was a shock to civilization.

NO ONE TO BLAME.

The Coroner Holds No One Responsible for the Deaths by the Burning of the National Surgical Institute at Indianapolis.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Feb. 22.—Coroner Manker has furnished the press with a copy of his verdict in the case of the recent Surgical institute fire. The verdict is a complete whitewash. It is very voluminous and fills two columns of nonpareil. It finds that the nineteen victims of the institute met their death by suffocation and not by burning; that all might have escaped but for their fright and excitement; that adequate means of protection and escape were provided; that the police, fire department and employes of the institution did their whole duty in assisting the inmates to escape; that the management did not comply with the law requiring printed notices of the location of the fire-escapes and how to use them to be posted, but it was held that "the acquaintance and familiarity of inmates with the construction of the building probably obviated the necessity of this." The conclusion of the coroner is that the management furnished all reasonable appliances for protection and it is therefore held blameless.

Saved from Prairie Wolves.

White was so numb when he awoke that he was unable to walk, and three days and four nights were spent in the stack. Prairie wolves surrounded the stack, and their barking attracted the attention of a farmer. But for his timely arrival no one would have ever known what became of White, as his body would have soon been devoured by the hungry brutes.

WHERE THEY ARE ALL GOING.

Northwestward ho! seems to be the cry now humming over the country. The vacant places in Minnesota, or at least those fit for farming, having been taken up the stream from the south is likely to join that from the east and pour into Manitoba and the fertile provinces adjoining it, particularly it appears, the Saskatchewan. The construction of railways, the free gift of land to settlers (160 acres to each) coupled with the recent splendid harvest, is drawing all men's attention to those provinces, so long a mere hunting ground, with the result that the farming world and his wife are casting longing eyes towards Manitoba, and farmers crowded or unprosperous where they now are, are making preparations to be off in the spring. They can secure a homestead free, and they want to secure it before the choicest locations are gone. The liberality of the railways there, and the care for the immigrants displayed by the government is bearing fruit. Farmers are no longer content to scrape while they may gather by the armful. Those solid fields of wheat in Manitoba and beyond it which mean gold, are prizes too valuable to be neglected, and they are within the reach of all who will go and possess them. And people are going. It is almost becoming a question of who will get there first, and in all directions are preparations being made for a start. The demand in Europe for the fat cattle of the west, which cost little but the care of raising them, and for the cheese and butter of Alberta and Assiniboia, is becoming a factor in North American commerce, and the wise ones are packing to be amongst the early birds.

RESCUED HIM PROMPTLY.

A Leap-Year Story Illustrating Woman's Superiority.

It was the last night of the old year. The clock on the mantel had clicked away the fleeting hours with brazen tongue and passed its hands over its bold, painted face until they pointed to 11:45.

Painfully upright in his chair sat the diffident youth whom Miss Pinkie McGraw had been devoting her time and talents unselfishly in entertaining since 8:30. With that rare artistic sense that now and then crops out even in the young and inexperienced, she had turned down the light in order that the contrast between his red necktie and his lemon-colored mustache might be a little less glaring, and the conversation had ranged from Shakspeare to Jackson Park, with occasional stoppages caused by temporary break-downs in the conversational machinery.

"In fifteen minutes, Miss Pinkie," he observed, looking at the clock, "the year 1891 will have gone into history."

He made an effort to hitch his chair a little nearer, but only succeeded in moving a little further away.

"I am—er—aware, Miss Pinkie," he proceeded, "that I must have—h'm—seemed unusually dull this evening—"

"Not at all, Mr. Yagson—not at all," softly interposed the young lady.

Mr. Yagson paused a few moments, apparently unable to decide whether she meant to enter a general denial of his dullness or merely to controvert the proposition that he was or could be duller than usual, but in the light of her gracious smile he felt emboldened to go ahead, and he tried it again:

"The—the year 1891 will always be a memorable one to me, Miss Pinkie. It—it was in the year 1891 that—that I first became acquainted with you."

"Yes," she replied, retrospectively. "But all years are memorable. A year is a long time, you know."

Again Mr. Yagson felt oppressed by a momentary uncertainty. Had the year 1891 seemed longer to her because he had become mixed up in it, or—or how?

"H'm—yes!" he said, "but don't you think some years are more—er—memorable than others?"

"O, of course!"

Mr. Yagson felt himself growing more helpless, but a glance at the clock seemed to nerve him to another effort.

It was 11:53.

Giving his chair one more well-meant but unsuccessful hitch he broke out again:

"All this evening, Miss Pinkie, I have been—h'm—h'm—thinking that—"

"Beg pardon?"

"I was going to say that all this evening I have been wondering whether——"

"You have been wondering whether——"

"Whether it has ever—h'm—occurred to you that I must surely have some object in——"

It was 11:57.

"Some object," he went on, huskily, "in coming——"

"I am not sure I quite understood that last remark, Mr. Yagson?"

"I—I am not sure I—er—quite understood it myself," he gasped, looking hopelessly round the room.

It was 11:59.

"But I am trying to say—h'm—to say that I have been thinking all the evening that it must have occurred to you that I—I must surely have some—some—object—"

"You made a remark to that effect a few minutes ago, Mr. Yagson."

"Yes. I—that is—I—the fact is, Miss Pinkie, that I have been thinking all the evening—"

Once more he stopped and looked with appealing eyes round the room.

And while he looked, lo! the clock, in slow and majestic measure, struck the hour of 12!

Then Miss Pinkie McGraw promptly rose up.

Swiftly crossing the room she took the trembling young man by the hand and said, with a radiant smile and an unmistakable note of triumph in her voice:

"Theodore, this is leap-year! Will you marry me?"

He hid his blushing face on her shoulder, murmured brokenly: "Y-yes!" and the agony was over.—Chicago Tribune.

CHILDHOOD'S MUSIC.

I know not why, yet often, when I'm seated
Wrapt in some day-dream's soft, delicious maze,
Within the cloisters of my soul repeated,
I hear the music sweet of other days.

The cradle song that, when the evening shadows
Began to fall, breathed out a soft "good night,"
The boyish glees, that ran across the meadows
At early morn, when summer skies were bright.

The organ's tones, so solemn and sonorous,
Recalling days when faith and trust were sure;
The far-off woodland echoes of some chorus
Sung o'er by childish voices, sweet and pure.

And with the music comes the recollection
Of morning welcome, and of evening prayer,
Of parents' tender love and kind protection,
Of sunny days, devoid of grief and care.

Of hopes and promises so fondly spoken,
When teachings good to good resolves gave birth,
While yet the dear home circle was unbroken,
'Mid hours of fireside merriment and mirth.

Ah me! these scenes come back with all the seeming
Of sweet realities—I know not why;
And so I find a pleasure in this dreaming,
And these dim melodies of days gone by.

A CRACK IN THE ICE.

The Marvelous Escape of a Young Circuit Rider.

NO ONE will deny that there is a particularly romantic side to the life and labors of the early circuit rider. As the forerunner of our modern civilization, the pioneer preacher went forth with a commendable faith and fortitude to prepare the way for the coming hosts who should make the wilderness and the solitary place glad by their skillful and industrious efforts. The pioneer clergyman was, therefore, the intrepid explorer of our frontier regions; and it would not be an exaggeration to aver that volumes could be written about his struggles, triumphs and adventures in those primeval days which tested to the utmost the bravery and the religious faith of men.

A lucky circumstance having thrown me into the company of one of those pioneer preachers, he took pains to relate to me the following bit of experience he had had when a dashing young circuit rider:

"It was in the winter of '76-77," said the clergyman, "that there happened, in connection with my labors as a pioneer preacher, one of those memorable incidents with which the life of a 'backwoods' parson is crowded. I was then in control of what was known as the Fayette and Manistique circuit, located on the north shore of Lake Michigan and in the upper peninsula. This circuit was nearly forty miles in length; and, despite this tremendous distance, I managed to cover it every Sabbath, with but few exceptions. Frequently the roads were made literally impassable for horses, owing to a heavy snowfall, or a windstorm which hurled great trees across the way so as to obstruct travel, or to the rising floods in the spring of the year sweeping away one or more of the innumerable frail bridges which spanned the streams. This being the case it is not to be wondered at that I was often obliged to walk a portion of the distance at least, to some of my appointments. My circuit was one of the most difficult to work, because of these and other reasons. Besides, being the only ordained clergyman in that region those days, I was, of course, not infrequently called upon to take long and perilous journeys in order to visit the sick, bury the dead, administer the rite of baptism, or perform the marriage ceremony. I would travel for miles without catching a glimpse of an abode or a human being; and the severity of the winters in that locality tended to intensify the ferocity of the wolves, which were alarmingly numerous in the dense and wild forests along those bleak shores.

"One bitter cold morning, just before the close of the year '76, I got my horse and cutter ready for a trip across what is known as Garden bay on the newly-formed ice, which appeared to be perfectly safe and sound. Some of the settlers had crossed with their teams only a few days before, and I deemed it safe enough to go that way, too. Besides, it was considerable of a short cut, saving me an unnecessary drive of at least fifteen miles. The distance across the ice was about twelve miles.

"My horse was a noble and trusty animal, and very tractable withal. Having driven him through many dangerous places and thoroughly tested his staying qualities and evenness of temper, I learned to put all confidence in him. I drove him briskly on the ice that morning, for I had no more time than I needed in which to reach my objective point. It was an important wedding which called me away, and the contracting parties were particular friends of mine. The bride's father—at whose residence the ceremony was to take place—was a very prominent and wealthy lumber dealer and owned extensive tracts of pine land, also two of the largest sawmills in that locality. He was a veritable lumber king. Hence it was to my advantage to be on time if possible.

"As I was driving along at a good pace, however, my horse suddenly stopped and nervously looked across toward the shore which we were skirting. I then saw him tremble as if with sudden fear. Glancing in the direction of the shore, I noticed what seemed to be some dogs scampering about at the edge of the adjacent forest; but I thought nothing of it, and presumed that a party of Indians were camped near the spot. I urged my horse along over the glare ice; but I perceived he was not disposed to travel with his former freedom and alacrity. In a few minutes I looked around and, to my great consternation, I observed a small pack of wolves dashing up behind me. I now felt confident that they were wolves, and not dogs, which I saw on the shore of the lake. My horse was right. He doubtless had heard their wild barking, though I heard it not until they made chase.

"The woods from which the wolves had emerged were uninhabited by any human being, and I made up my mind that my best policy was to keep moving forward, inasmuch as I was more than half way across the ice. Once on the other side I would be safe, for the lumber king's house was right on the edge of the lake; and if there were no bad places in the ice, I felt reasonably certain that I could keep the ferocious beasts off until I struck the land. A ready revolver—which I invariably carried with me on such journeys—proved serviceable for a time; but a grave difficulty soon confronted me. I noticed just ahead of my horse a crack in the ice—the dread of all drivers in those parts. I detected it by the manifest uneveness caused by an upheaval of snow and ice all along the opening, and also by the dark, watery appearance of the ice. Yet I felt I could proceed.

"My horse slackened his speed as he drew near the opening, which was about nine inches in width. As he did so the weight began to bear the ice down so low that the water was rapidly gathering on the surface. I instantly wheeled the horse around, drove him back a short distance, turned again, and, bringing my whip into requisition, drove up once more to the opening, but the horse was terribly frightened and refused to jump across. I turned him around again to get away from the weak ice. By this time the wolves had grown so bold as to strike terror through my heart. My horse fairly sweat great drops during the awful crisis, but I was within only about three miles of my destination and was determined to force my horse across the opening as the only feasible method of escape. The lumber dealer's house lay on the other side of a point of land which ran out into the lake, consequently my perilous situation was not observed by anyone.

"On coming up once more to the forbidding crack in the ice my horse again began to falter, yet I spoke to him so sharply that he became desperate and leaped across the opening; but no sooner did he strike the ice on the farther side than we all broke through with a resounding crash which echoed and reechoed along the dismal, far-reaching shore in the most weird cadences imaginable. Picture to yourself the situation. There was the horse, almost completely covered with water, the cutter floating behind him, and I standing up in it, fearing every moment that the wolves would spring upon me or the horse.

"By the merest casualty, however, the piece of ice which had broken loose under the horse's feet when he jumped happened to be of good size. The result was that when I applied the whip, my horse, with one tremendous effort, raised his front feet above water and planted them firmly in the solid ice, at which juncture the broken cake of ice served an excellent purpose of helping to buoy up the horse's hind parts to such an extent that he was enabled to completely extricate himself—cutter, driver and all landing safely on the solid ice beyond the opening, and that, too, without anything breaking either about the harness or cutter. It was all done in a moment or two—so quickly in fact that the occurrence seemed more like a dream to me than a stern reality. To this day it is a profound mystery to me how a horse could recover himself as mine did then after having broken through into water of frightful depth. Yet the circumstance is as true as it is marvelous.

"On we sped afterwards, as if nothing serious had transpired, the wolves following hard after us; but in a few minutes the bluff was reached, and then the lumber king's house was plainly in sight and within but a trifling distance.

"I had emptied the last chamber of my revolver; but, while the shots I fired had the desirable effect of beating the wolves back for the time being, I do not think I succeeded in seriously wounding any one of them. As we neared the shore the hungry beasts began to fall back one by one, of their own accord, until all had disappeared, for they became apprehensive and did not at all relish the signs of civilization which were becoming more and more visible to them.

"To put it mildly I can assure you I met with a cordial reception at the lumber dealer's home, and was warmly congratulated on my remarkable escape. I was neither more nor less than a hero in the estimation of the lumber king, whose jolly round face actually beamed as I related my tale of adventure. My horse, too, was an object of enthusiastic admiration, and on entering the stable he was thoroughly rubbed down and warmly blanketed by willing hands, and strange to say I never noticed that he was a bit the worse for his cold bath.

"The wedding ceremony over, I returned by another way, reaching my boarding place in safety.

"A few days afterwards I was more than surprised on receiving from the wealthy lumber dealer a check for five hundred dollars in addition to the acceptable sum which had been handed to me by the bridegroom on the eventful day of the wedding. Of course this stroke of good fortune was duly appreciated by a young circuit rider, who, as may be imagined, was not overburdened with this world's goods."
—Thomas J. Macmurray, in Detroit Free Press.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—A man who claimed to have seen Washington inaugurated president, and to have been a friend of Simon Kenton, was Alfred Cole, who died at Springfield, Ky., not long ago. He was alleged to have been one hundred and fifteen years old.

—Miss Kate Furbish, Maine's botanist, has traveled thousands of miles over that state in connection with her "Flora of Maine." She generally travels alone, carries no weapons, and says she has not, in her twenty years' experience, encountered "anything to be afraid of."

—Churton Collins is rather late in accusing Tennyson of plagiarism, but he has set certain circles in England agog over the energetic manner in which he has gone about it, naming in the laureate's poems many passages which he declares are taken bodily from Virgirl, Lucretius and Theocritus, together with phrases from the early English poets.

—Pierre Ruan, an aged banker of Paris, had a prophetic dream a few years ago which told him that he would live until the year 1902. He was so firm in the belief that the dream was correct that he had a monument erected with his name, age and the date, 1902, cut upon it. The old man has just died, and the marble-cutter had another Pierre Ruan inscription and date put on.

—Miss Ethel Ingalls, favorite daughter of the ex-senator, is devoted to dogs, horses and china. Her pretty room is hung with pictures of the former, and scattered about on tables and brackets are countless bits of rare bric-a-brac, china and silver from every land under the sun. She has a large correspondence, and many cranks inundate her with advice, applications and petitions.

—Don Emillo Castelar, ex-president of the Spanish republic, is now engaged in Paris on important books. The first is a monograph on Columbus, to be issued on the occasion of the impending celebration of the discovery of America; the second will be a work on the principal orators of Spain, to be published in New York; the third a description of the most beautiful cathedrals in the world.

—Owen Meredith's (Lord Lytton) coffin was borne to the grave without a blossom to decorate its pall, according to the direction of Lady Lytton, who said that her husband had requested that not so much "as the tiniest violet or the smallest rosebud" should be used about his bier. "What in Heaven's name have poor flowers done to be condemned to serve such a horrid purpose as being consigned to vaults and graves? I like a sad-looking funeral," was a frequent saying of the poet; and his funeral cermony was, indeed, a gloomy one.

—The executors of Mr. Bancroft's library have decided to offer it in one lot. The collection is a very large one, the manuscripts are numerous and valuable, and many of the books are enriched by the addition of Mr. Bancroft's own marginal comments. A special study of its extent and character has been made by Mr. John F. Sabin, who estimates it to be twice as large as that of the late S. L. M. Barlow, and three times as large as the Menzies collection. All book lovers hope that the executors may be successful in their attempt to prevent its being scattered.

—A workingman called on a country clergyman closely related to a ducal house. The applicant wanted a letter of recommendation to a neighboring nobleman, from whom he hoped to obtain employment. "Why not go personally and see my lord?" the friend asked. "Well, you see," was the nervous answer, "I do not like speaking to Lord X.; he may be proud and not care to listen to the likes of me. It's quite a different thing with yourself, for there's nothing of the gentleman in you."

A Question of Dinner Time.

A cardinal who commanded the troops of Pope Boniface IX. in the march of Acona, finding himself on one occasion in a position in which he must conquer or die, promised his soldiers that, if they secured the victory, those who fell should dine that very day with the angels. They marched to the combat with alacrity; but finding that the cardinal was careful not to expose himself, "How is it," said one of them, "that you show no anxiety for the celestial banquet to which you have invited us so warmly?" "Because it is not yet my dinner time, and I am not hungry."—All the Year Round.

HOME HINTS AND KELPS.

—Potato Rissoles: Mash the potatoes, add salt, pepper and a little chopped parseley. Shape into balls with a little flour, roll them in beaten egg, then in bread-crumbs and fry in boiling lard.—Housekeeper.

—Creamed Potatoes: Chop cold boiled potatoes; place in a sauce-pan or spider with rich milk, butter, pepper and salt and cook carefully, stirring constantly to prevent sticking, until the whole is thick and creamy.—Detroit Free Press.

—Chopped Ham Sandwiches: Take a cupful of finely-chopped cold-boiled ham, the yelks of six hard-boiled eggs and a teaspoonful of French mustard. Mix the mustard well into the eggs, add the ham, and spread it between layers of thin buttered bread.—Household Monthly.

—White Fruit Cake: Cream one pound of sugar and half a pound of butter together; sift in one pound of flour with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder; add one tea-cupful of chopped citron, one of pounded almonds, one of seeded raisins, a grated cocoanut and the juice of a lemon, beat well and stir in gently the beaten whites of ten eggs. Pour in a greased mold and bake. When cold, ice with cocoanut icing.—Home.

—Boiled Crabs: Have a large pot of water strongly salted, let it boil hard, put in your crabs and boil them for twenty minutes. If the water should cease boiling the crabs will be watery. Take them out, break off the claws, wipe the shells very clean, also the large claws. When cold place them on a dish with the large claws around it. The claws should be cracked before they are sent to the table. The small ones are not generally eaten.—Chicago Herald.

—Chicken Pates: Chop meat of cold chicken fine and season with salt; make a large cupful of rich drawn butter, and, while on the fire, add two hard-boiled eggs minced fine, a little chopped parsley and the meat of the chicken; let this mixture almost boil; have ready some pate pans of good rich paste; remove the covers with the edge of a knife, fill in with the mixture and arrange on a hot platter; in baking the crust it is a good plan to fill in with a square of stale bread, which is easily removed as soon as it comes from the oven; this keeps the crust from falling flat, as it would otherwise do without the chicken mixture.—Boston Herald.

—Stewed Cabbage: Take off the outer leaves till the crisp ones are reached. Cut these from the stalk and cut fine or not as you like. Have plenty of cold water in the kettle, put in the cabbage, but do not salt it, put over the fire and let boil one-half hour, then drain dry, cover with rich milk and cook till tender. Season with a spoonful of butter, salt and pepper to suit your taste. Use only enough milk to cover. This is very delicate and will not hurt a weak stomach as when salted before cooked tender. Young housekeepers will do well to remember that salt boiled in milk will sometimes curdle it, and it is therefore better to season just before taking from the fire.

—Italian Chicken and Macaroni: Cut up a chicken and boil it till tender. While the chicken is cooking, dip out a pint of the chicken broth into another stewpan, and put it with one small onion sliced, one tablespoon butter and a quarter of a pound of macaroni broken into inch pieces. Cook until the water has nearly boiled away, then add one cup of milk or cream and cook slowly till the macaroni has absorbed the milk. Sprinkle grated cheese over it. Boil the chicken liquor till reduced to one pint, remove the fat, thicken it slightly with flour wet in cold water. Cook ten minutes. Add salt and pepper. Pour the macaroni over the chicken, and the sauce over the whole.—Boston Budget.

A PRACTICAL SUGGESTION.

How a Working Woman Might Find Employment.

One of the most practical suggestions for service is that of the woman who comes in to work "by the day." There is very much more in this idea of daily service or of employing a woman who, in common parlance, "does day's work," than has ever been fully developed. Washing and scrubbing are, at present, the principal duties of such workers. But these, although they represent the hardest labor, cover only a small part of the daily housework.

The sweeping and dusting, the sewing, the cooking, the dish-washing, the "clearing up"—most interminable of tasks—the mending and the chamber work—all these come into the home life and into the line of a housekeeper's duties. All these have to be overlooked. Somebody has to see that they are well done, often to do them. And the time and the patience and the strength which into those "little things," nobody but the woman who does them knows.

Darning stockings, with the attendant horrors of mending and sewing on of buttons, represents a batch of work which comes regularly every week to be done, and is a sore trial to the woman who longs for the time it takes that she may give it to better things. Yet she knows these tasks are necessary, and that they must be accomplished for the comfort and well-being of the family in her charge.

Now there must surely be plenty of women who can not do finished or high-class work, yet to whom mending and stocking-darning, clearing up of rooms and dusting, would be light and agreeable work, women who, having ample time, would be willing to do such important yet trivial house-work for the small sum of money the service is worth. They need not be highly educated or very young women; they need only be willing, quick, and ready to do well any and every trifle which comes up for somebody to do. There are certainly plenty of places waiting for just such workers.

We hear much of the women who are starving in making shirts at three cents apiece, and trousers at five cents a pair. The tales are too well authenticated to be doubted. But surely the work above suggested would be easier, pleasanter, and more profitable to the women who are keeping soul and body together on such a pittance as that.—Harper's Bazar.

"Be mine," she cried dramatically, as she sank on one knee before him. "I have long loved you, and now I can resist no longer—I must know my fate. Sweet creature, say the word that will make me the happiest of women."

"I don't want to be married," he answered coyly, "ma says I'm too young and couldn't take care of a wife. Take some one of your own size. Let go of me. I don't want to be kissed."

"Oh, you great big ninny," she said, banging the furniture. "I was only rehearsing for a leap year party. I wouldn't have you if you were worth your weight in gold." And she bounced off in a huff.—Detroit Free Press.

Home Troubles.

Offer up all such occasions to Him, and if sometimes you are put out, and give way to impatience, do not be discouraged, but make haste to regain your lost composure.—Detroit Free Press.

BUILDING THE MONON.

Most Extensive Improvements to Be Made.

For a long time past Chicago shippers have loudly complained of the manner in which they are handicapped in developing a trade with the South by the gross discrimination in rates that has been maintained in favor of New York shippers. Now there is a fair promise of relief. Since the Thomas-Brice syndicate got hold of the Monon Road plans have been in the course of development for making that line part of a great north and south system in connection with the Richmond Terminal and other southern systems in which that syndicate holds the control.

These plans have now been about fully developed and will very shortly, it is said, be put into operation. A prominent part of these plans, it is intimated, is the making of such rates from Chicago to all points that can be reached by the Monon as will place Chicago shippers on an equal footing with those of New York and tend to develop a great and lucrative business between the two sections of country. At all events great improvements have been decided upon in regard to the Monon.

Now the syndicate is satisfied and the contemplated improvements will be pushed with the utmost possible dispatch. The capital stock of the road has been increased and $3,200,000 of the additional stock has been sold for cash, and this amount will be spent in the improvement of the road. The terminus is at Chicago and Louisville are to be doubled in capacity. Somewhere in the neighborhood of $1,000,000 is to be spent in preparation for the world's fair. The Monon is now the only road having a dining car service between Chicago and Cincinnati and the service is to be extended to the Louisville line. In short, the Monon is to be made part of one of the best equipped and biggest systems that has a terminal in this city.—Chicago Evening Post.

DELANO DIARY.

—Little Irene Frazee is down with Scarlet Fever.

—The Township election will be held at Simon Weldelee's Hall in Delano, on Tuesday, March 8, 1892.

—The Father Washington Ball held at the City Hall on the evening of the 22nd was attended by 86 couples.

—Articles left at the City Hall at the last M. E. sociable can be obtained by calling at Mrs. Mulford's Store.

—Reports from the Rader School House Prohibition Lecture by Rev. Pinkham is that it was a very fine speech. Some of his audience say he is about the smartest speaker they ever listened to.

—Among Delanoites who attended the old settlers meeting at Buffalo, on Washington's birthday, were J. D. Young and family, Rev. J. R. Davies and family, Misses Maud Sherry and Emma Holstrom, Mrs. J. H. Coffin and Dr. Catlin.

—John McGary was in to see us yesterday. He says we ought to have written a preface to his lecture on "Why I am a Democrat" telling the people that it was delivered at a prohibition meeting. John is bound to stick to the faith just the same.

—Read the instructions concerning Scarlet Fever, issued by the State Board of Health for the protection of neighborhoods from this disease. It was sent out in their publication Public Health, a few weeks ago and we reproduce it in today's GAZETTE.

—That Gizzardless old Gormand up street gets off more gibberish this week. She must be molting from the way the feathers fly. She is trying to devour the G. N. Railway Co., the Editor of the BUFFALO GAZETTE, the Health Officer, Dr. Catlin and all the rest of the Democrats. She should be qurantined.

—One of Delano's saloons has been discovered breaking over their bargain with the city council in keeping open during the "wee sma hours" when honest folk should be enjoying their slumbers while minors participated in games of cards. Threats have been made that if the offense is repeated the law will be called into requisition.

—A caucus of the Democratic voters of the Town of Franklin is called for Saturday, March 5th at Simon's Hall in Delano at 3 P. M.

Three town Supervisors one of whom shall be chairman, Town Clerk, Treasurer, Assesor, Two Justices of the Peace, Two Constables, And an Overseer of the roads in each District are to be elected.

—A call has been issued for a Democratic county convention to be held at Buffalo on Saturday, March 26th, to select eight delegates to attend the State convention to be held at St. Paul on the 31st of March and which State convention will select delegates to the National Democratic convention to be held at Chicago and will also place in nomination a Democratic electoral ticket.

—Leon Frazee has moved into J. E. Brothers' house on River street where his little girl is sick with scarlet fever. She was taken sick at the Danforth House, where she was quarintined by being kept with her mother in a small room on the second floor, until Wednesday evening when she was well wrapped up, covers arranged so that she could not get a breath of cold air, and driven rapidly in a buggy to the place where last week's GAZETTE announced the family intended making their residence. The room lately occupied at the hotel was disinfected and the quarintine at that place raised on Thursday. The present residence is now under quarintine, Mrs. Frazee, her sister and the sick baby being the sole occupants while Leon attends to outside matters, boarding at the hotel. This explanation is made on account of the attack on the health officer, by the Eagle, which has no more idea of quarantine than it had of the injurious effects of gasses from a leaky furnace in the school house at the time its chief editor stood with his nose over a pan of burning sulphur until driven off from a fit of coughing caused by the fumes to prove to the crowd that gasses in a school room would not hurt anybody.

If the Eagle dont like the County Financial statement issued by county Auditor Heath in the Wright County Times, that part the Eagle copied from the GAZETTE we mean, perhaps she might carry over that "Expunging resolution" I Gutzwiller had left over from a recent meeting of the Board of Education.

We are sorry to learn of the death of Mr. Alexander Mc Lane, of Annandale. Although we never had the pleasure of meeting him we learned to respect him highly from his writings and from what those having an acquaintance with him said of him. He was the GAZETTE correspondent from Annandale, almost since the paper was started.

Scarlet Fever.

From a late number of "Public Health", we take the following concerning Scarlet Fever "The essential facts of this disease needful to be known for its prevention or restriction are:

First—That its special infection is developed in the eruption in the skin, and given off thence to persons and clothing, and to bedding and other things in occupied rooms, and that it continues to be given off constantly till the skin is entirely well and all scurf or scurfiness has disappeared.

Second—That the attack of the disease in one child may provoke a severe attack in another exposed to it, and that when it is epidemic a large proportion of the cases are often of so slight a type as not to be recognized at first, or, often, till the infection has been given to others.

Third—The period of "incubation" (time from taking the infection till the first symptoms appear) is rarely longer than seven days (one week), sometimes but a few hours.

Fourth—The patient is infectious and so dangerous to others, for at least forty days and as a rule for seven or eight weeks, i. e., until the skin is entirely well and free of scurf, particularly on the palms of the hands and soles of the feet.

Fifth—The infection preserves its virulence in clothing and bedding hung up in closets or packed in trunks, clothing of the patient or his attendant or others exposed to him. So stored, the infection clings to such things, sometimes for months, ready, when the article is shaken in the air or worn, to float off and infect the nearest child.

Sixth—Boiling water or a strong solution of quicklime will destroy this infection in clothing or bedding, and the last will do the same for floors and walls if freely applied. On the person of the sick a simple ointment (one part mutton tallow and two parts fresh lard melted separately and mixed thoroughly till cold) is the best and easiest means of limiting the spread of the infection. Used all over the body it does two things—relieves the fever and itching of the rash, and confines the loose particles of skin containing virus to its surface or to the body clothing or the sheets of the bed thus preventing its escape into the air.

You can't tell how much a preacher is doing for the Lord by the size of his salary.

People who can talk much about themselves to the satisfaction of others are scarce.

The kind of righteousness that takes people to heaven is not the kind that brags on itself.

"Let the wicked forsake his way, and return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him."

Going to a charity ball to help the Lord is something the devil is always ready to say amen to.

People who join a church to sell goods or get into better society, never praise the Lord very much.

People who make the most noise at church entertainments are generally very quiet during a revival.

This world is being taken for the Lord, in spite of the preachers who are jealous of each other.

There are well-to-do people who claim to be praying for their children, who have never presented them with a Bible.

The kind of religion that tells in the long run is the kind that never howls and growls because there is no pudding on wash day.

The fact that an innocent child can grow up and become a devil, ought to be proof enough to satisfy sensible people that there is a devil.

The christian who is willing to throw away the whole Bible every time he finds something he can not understand, has not yet taken one real step toward heaven.

People who have the least to eat at home very often find the most fault with the fare when they travel. Finding fault with others is not an evidence that you are living close to the Saviour yourself.

A woman will eat anything without complaining, while a man will begin to backslide whenever the cooking goes wrong; but when it comes to the fit of a garment that doesn't suit her, she has opinions that can no more be held in check than you can put mittens on a landslide.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory.

NEXT Tuesday is election day. This is Presidential year when every Democrat should be on the alert and see to it that the best men in the party are nominated for the different offices and elected, resting assured that no other party has better men. When Democrats allow Republicans and weak kneed Democrats to make them believe that in a town the size of Delano and as strongly Democratic as is Delano there are not enough good men to fill the village offices without electing a majority of Republicans they lay themselves liable to become the laughing stock of the country. Democratic officials for two years past have proven themselves capable of managing our village as well as it has ever been managed.

Not in a Party and Not in a Dilemma.

BY M. E. BENNETT.

The Tribune informs me that I am not in the Farmers' Alliance. That Dr. Fish will not admit anyone that will not endorse the sub-treasury. I suppose the Tribune means that if I were a voter and Dr. Fish was a candidate for office he would not accept my vote in his favor unless I had faith in the Sub-Treasury.

Now I did not suppose for a moment that intelligent people were expected to endorse every plank in the platform of a party and let cliques and politicians do all the thinking for them.

My sympathy is certainly with the Farmers' Alliance and other industrial organizations that are contending manfully for their rights. I do not see the use of many of the planks in the platform adopted at the Minneapolis convention, but as I am not a voter no excommunication will be necessary at present. I am among the governed from whose consent the government does not derive its powers, just or unjust whichever it may be. It does not make any diffence if we are out of one party and not in another.

Perhaps what the Tribune says applies to men but it does not mean me.

The editor of the Tribune says my last letter in the GAZETTE was an expression of my own ideas on public affair and not much of an argument. I have not quoted his words but this is the substance. I supposed that it was my own ideas that were expected on a subject on which I was writing. Every word I wrote in my communications had a bearing on the subject we are considering.

I did not mean that all but editors were free to express their opinions. I suppose everyone is free to express his opinion, but I know it is not always policy to do so. More strength and courage is needed to pull against the current than to float with it.

We can not see how Mr. Tanner can say consistantly that he does not favor class legislation when he has not a word to say about the National banking system while he unfairly or blindly attacks the Sub-Treasury and Land-Loan scheme, by stating that the fund would have to be raised by a tax and that the farmers would rob the government.

To show that I am not in a dilemma I will briefly state my understanding of the financial scheme. This is the National bank: If a man or company can procure $50,000 in U. S. bonds he can deposit them in the U. S. Treasury and get in return $40,000 in legal tender or 90 per cent on his bonds which he loans to the public at what ever rate of interest he can get, while his bonds are drawing interest from the government.

This is what the Sub-Treasury and Land Loan means: That the farmer instead of bonds gives his land and imperishable crops as security to the government while he borrows money for which he pays interest. Now I call both class legislation, and with all the light I can get on this subject the only difference is that the former favors the non-producers while the latter favors the producing class. I ask Mr. Tanner as I did in my first piece, Why he attacks the latter while he is silent on the former if he is free to express his honest opinion?

I will endeavor to give an illustration showing my position on these questions and I trust I will not be misunderstood as I was in the comparison in my last letter. When I said great minds had prostituted the muses, etc., I did not mean that the average editor had the inspiration of the muses. I meant that if great minds stooped there was an excuse for the village editor. And now the illustration. Imagine if you can all government priveleges being placed in a huge heap. For years bankers, railroad officers, and other representatives of corporate monopolies have been stationed at this heap of special priveleges, filling their ample grips and carting off the priveleges for their own benefit and enjoyment while the watchdogs of a hireling press keeps up a continual sham alarm to divert the attention of the people from what is going on. The farmers at last finds out what the monopolists are doing, and resolved to move en masse upon the pile, supplied with only a small hand satchel. No sooner had they started in the direction of the pile, than every journalistic watchdog from the sleek, well-fed St. Bernard of the big magazine, the burly mastiff of the metropolitan daily, the pugnacious bulldog of the commercial weekly, to the most insignificant poodle that barks from behind the desk of the country party organ; no sooner had the grangers started than all these set up a vociferous howl, and sprang nimbly forward to prevent the farmers from approaching the government privelege pile, and the representatives of monopolies and the corrupted politicians of the old parties urge on the baying pack. But the process of filling the monopolistic grip never lags.

Now I submit that if these journalistic watchdogs were free to act as they chose and chose to be of any use to the general public, they would turn upon the pampered corporate millionaires who are gorging themselves upon government privileges and rout them from the heap one and all. They might consistently stand between the farmer and the special privelege heap.

I do not plead for letting the farmer in, but I do say that you must drive the monopolist out before you can consistently exclude the farmer. Make over the government priveleges for the benefit of the whole people. To you of the old parties who so loudly denounce the farmer while supporting the present corporate iniquities I would quote the words of the Great Teacher, "Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast the mote out of thy brother's eye." I did not say that the parties were wholly corrupt, but will any intelligent person say that there is none or not much corruption in politics? The N. Y. Sun in reporting last fall's election in that city stated that votes were bought on the streets at from fifty cents to two or three dollars a poll.

We read of barrels of money being used to carry elections in states where the parties are nearly equal. What is it used for if not as a corruption fund? The election of the Senator from our own State is under a cloud. These are only instances in a thousand that I could name. How can reform be expected from men who do not call such things signs of corruption if not positive corruption?

MAPLE LAKE.

The Literary Saturday evening Feb. 27, had a full house. The program though not large was not fully carried out. The Literary seems to have reached its culmination in enthusiasm if not in excelence for this season. There were two Recitations. The "Astonisher" was marked by brevity and excellence. A prominent and highly amusing excise was the Reading by D. D. Vandergon.

The Question for Debate—Resolved, That the Annexation of Canada would be beneficial to the United States, was not discussed. If there were any defaters at all they were all on the same side of the Qestion Mr. Collins, though not on the program, on being asked to participate in the debate, expressed his willingness to take either side. Mr. Collins endeavored to excite interest in favor of the debate, and urged those who had been appointed to take part, but there appeared to be a conpiracy which he could not overcome. The Question Resolved—That City life is preferable to country life, was substituted. The speakers on the affirmative side were J. F. Collins, H. Bartholomew and Miss McCarthy and on the naegitive A. A. A. Bartholmew and A. A. Jewett. The Judges were T. B. Gorman, Jas. Gorman and A. W. Nary, they decided in favor of the affirmative, The debate was very good, considering the circumstances.

The Question for discussion at the next meeting Saturday Mar. 12, is Resolved—That Abraham Lincoln has done more for this Country than George Washington. It will be highly interesting on that occasion. There will be a full number of speakers arranged on both sides. To hear Mr. Collins alone will amply repay attendance—Carrying as he does the weapon of Zeus on his tongue, he will be prolific in argument, logic and eloquence. The question is an important one. Washington the Father and Lincoln the Saviour of our Country will occupy a prominent place for all time in the history of liberty.

MONTROSE MENTIONS.

The teachers meeting held here on Saturday last prooved to be very entertaining as well as instructive There were a large number of visitors as well as teachers present.

J. R. Davies will give us a talk on the saloon question next Sabbath. Let every body come out and hear what he has to say.

Miss Celeste Cowan, of Minnetonka has been visiting her sister, Mrs W. H. Wright, the past week.

The Leap Year party held at Gerdsen's Hall Feb. 26th was a very enjoyable affair. The ladies doing the honors in a very "gentlemanly" manner.

The circumstance that happened here last Friday night, (the arrest and fining of one of our Montrose boys for drunkenness.) is a fair example of what we may expect if the salloon element have their way election day. Be careful, you fathers that are voters it may be your boy next time.

Henry Wright, after a short leave of absence has returned to his work.

The Good Templars will hold an open meeting at Gerdsen's Hall Monday evening March 7th. There will be one or two speakers from abroad present. And the members of the order will spare no pains to make the meeting pleasant and entertaining to all who may come. The Good Templars are also to give an old Fashioned New England dinner to the temperance voters of Montrose, dinner to be served at 12 o'clock in the Good Templars Hall.

It is to be hoped that every man that has boys of his own, will carefully and prayerfully consider what he is doing before he cast his vote. Think what a saloon, with all its allurements, means to your boys. Think what it would mean to you, if you vote a saloon in here, and your boys, through your act, are led to drinking, and are ruined body and soul mothers, use your whole time and influence against the saloon. Remember what happened in our neighboring village last week. How soon might you not be called to see your dear boy in the same condition in which that mother found her dear and only son; must not her heart have nearly broken, at the sight: Mothers of Montrose, ask Gods help that such a sight may never be yours; pray that the same temptations may not be placed before your boys.

Last Saturday evening at about seven o'clock our quiet town was started by the wild cry of fire! The building occupied by F. W. Rupelius as a residence and store, was discovered to be in flames, the fire spreading so rapidly that the building was soon doomed. The crowd worked hard with, and the wind blowing fairly toward them, their efforts were unavailing. The building owned by Kretchmer and used as a blacksmith shop, was the next to go. The last building to burn was owned by J. N. Haven, and occupied by Oscar Goodwin six buildings in all were burned. The losses of Rupelius and Kretchmer were covered by insurance. Haven was not insured. It is to be hoped that our town people will be themselves now, and in case of another fire, have a hook and ladder at least. The fire could have been confined to the first building, if there had been the least thing to work with. If some of our people would work as hard to establish a fire department as they do for a saloon we would have something with which to protect our homes instead of something to destroy them.

The songs, essays and recitations by Mr. McCutcheon and his scholars were quite interesting. The famous Indians, Big Foot and Tall Chief took an active part. The scholars made their teacher a small present, Miss Hattie Burnes making the presentation speech, but sometimes small presents are thought more of than larger ones. It has been so I know in some cases with your correspondent. After the exercises were over the school and visitors partook of a picnic dinner consisting of vegetables, meats, pastry, accompanied with a first class appetite.

John Cain is going to the land of the mountains soon.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

MINNETRISTA—1855.

In its first settlement two currents of immigration flowed into the town of Minnetrista independent of each other namely: (1) The Germans, of whom John and Joseph Merz were the pioneers, came into the southwestern part of the town from points on the Minnesota River, and (2) the English speaking people came into the northeasterly part of the town by crossing Lake Minnetonka in boats and by traveling over Garrison's and Moffat's road through Wayzata, which touched the northeasterly corner of the town; the temporary roads opened by the latter to their habitations were branches extending from the Garrison-Moffat road having no other connection, while those opened by the Germans connected similarly with roads running to Chaska and other points on the Minnesota River, so these settlements progressed for a time practically ignorant of each others existence, being separated by the bays of upper Minnetonka and an expanse of unbroken forest.

The settlers of the northeastern part of the town and their locations in 1855 were about as follows: Ebenezer F. Sutherland and family of which Martin, Drew and William Sutherland were members, settled at the northeast corner of the town on the Garrison-Moffat road, Sylvanus Stinson (brother of Robert Stinson, of Independence) settled on land now owned by Anthony Yerger, —— Byers, a son-in law of John Carman, settled on Cook's Bay on land on which Mound City is now located; Edwin Gribble, Nathan H. Sanders and J. F. Buck located on the north shore of Harrison's bay; Frederick A. Jennings, father of Frederick Jennings mentioned previously in connection with Orono, settled on the westerly shore of the West Arm with other members of his family, and also during the same year Doctor S. D. Grant and Norman Shook settled in Minnetrista, and Harvey Y. Russell, a brother of Wm. F. Russell (see Orono) made a settlement on land on the north side of the West Arm which he pre-empted soon after.

ADMIRERS of Col. Robert Ford, the gentleman who assisted Gov. Crittenden, of Missouri, in ridding the world of Jesse James, will be glad to learn that the rumor of Col. Ford's death which gained currency a few days ago was false. The colonel is now a citizen of the new mining town of Creede, Col., is enjoying good health and has not been engaged in a shooting affray since the holidays.

LEPROSY is increasing at an alarming rate in Spain. From Alcanta it is reported that several villages are afflicted with the terrible malady. In Benidorm there are eight families, every member of which is a leper. At Gata the number of lepers is so great that a hospital is to be built for them, and at other points the plague is increasing in a frightful manner and the doctors are unable to cope with it.

AN English judge at Wolverhampton has just rendered a decision which will make him popular the world over. He fined a grocer five dollars and costs for weighing the paper with the sugar he sold to a customer. The judge ruled that English law requires a man to deliver whatever is paid for. When a pound of sugar is paid for the grocer has no right to deliver a pound of sugar and paper mixed. This is justice with a vengeance.

SOME modern philosopher has given in these eleven lines the summary of life: Seven years in childhood's sport and play, 7; seven years in school from day to day, 14; seven years at trade or college life, 21; seven years to find a place and wife, 28; seven years to building upward given, 35; seven years to business hardly driven, 42; seven years for some wild goose chase, 49; seven years for wealth and bootless race, 56; seven years for hoarding for your heir, 63; seven years in weakness, pain and care, 70; then die and go—you should know where.

AND now it has got so that dentists carve your teeth by electricity. A dentist in Troy, N. Y., has recently introduced the electric motor, and ere long the machine will be as indispensable in a dentist's office as the practitioner's assuring smile or the patient's well-filled pocketbook. "Teeth filled by electricity while you wait" may soon be expected as a familiar sign throughout the country. The prolific nature which provides both toothache and electricity, with the dental operator thrown in, is a constant source of amazement to the mind of the inquiring student.

THE official results of the first census ever taken in British Burmah have just been published. The population, exclusive of the Shan states, is 7,750,000. The Shan states contain 376,000 inhabitants, so that the population of the province exceeds 8,000,000. The average density to the square mile is only forty-five. As this is the first census ever taken in Upper Burmah it is not known whether or at what rate the people are multiplying. The returns, however, show a large increase over official estimates. The population is 3,000,000 in Upper Burmah, and 4,750,000 in Lower Burmah.

For the United States.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 29.—The opinion of the United States supreme court in the case of ex-parte Thomas H. Cooper, owner of the Canadian schooner Sayward, by which the government of Great Britain and the Dominion of Canada sought to obtain from the highest legal tribunal in the United States a determination of the question of the right of the United States to exercise exclusive jurisdiction over the seal fisheries in Behring sea, was to-day rendered by the United States supreme court.

The decision is against the British government. This does not invalidate the arbitration proceedings now going on between this country and Great Britain, but it would have had its effect against the United States in the negotiations if the court had rendered a different decision.

The "no quorum" case, in which the legality of the Dingley act was attacked by Ballin, Joseph & Co., importers, was to-day decided by the United States supreme court. The importers maintained that Speaker Reed's action was in violation of the constitution, and that the act passed in this manner was void. The United States court for the southern district of New York decided against the United States and in favor of the importers on this ground, so that the case came before the United States supreme court adverse to the constitutionality of the "no quorum" method of parliamentary procedure.

DEFIED THE LAW.

Strikers Render Futile an Attempt to Run Street Cars in Indianapolis Under Police Protection—Riotous Scenes.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Feb. 29.—The crisis of the street car strike came Saturday and for nearly five hours the principal thoroughfares of the city were in possession of a howling, hooting mob, and scenes of disorder were enacted that have never had a parallel in this city. The police were attacked with stones and clubs, the drivers and road officers of the company were dragged from the cars and beaten, the cars were overturned upon the streets and several men were carried wounded and bleeding from the scene.

The strike has now been in existence since Sunday last, when the entire street railway system was tied up through a disagreement between the men and President Frenzel, of the company, over the meaning of the verdict reached two weeks ago by a board of arbitration. On Monday and each succeeding day this week the company made a feeble effort to run its cars, but the mayor declined to order the police to protect the company, and the strikers easily prevented the running of cars. In the meantime the business men of the city began to complain, and all property owners saw in the mayor's action a menace to their property and business and loud complaints were heard from many of that class. Others, however, sympathized with the strikers and encouraged them to persevere in their battle course.

Friday night the mayor decided to give the protection that he had so long refused, and secret orders were given the police to be present at the company's stables at 7:30 o'clock Saturday morning. The force of ninety men, including the night police, were distributed at the several stables and simultaneous attempts were made to start the mule cars from the barns. The plan had been kept so secret that but few of the strikers were in the New Jersey street barn when the police arrived, and eight cars were quickly brought out, each occupied by a half dozen policemen, and started down town. Feeble opposition was made along the line, but this was easily overcome and the cars proceeded towards the Louisiana street barn.

By this time a thousand men and boys had gathered upon the street and telephone messages had called the strikers to the scene. These advanced to meet the cars and a hand to hand struggle with the police began. The officers drew their clubs and struck right and left, but the mob paid no attention to this. Big policemen were literally picked up and hurled to one side, while the mob closed in around the cars. Capt. Dawson rallied his men time and again, but the policemen soon found themselves so jammed in by the surging mass that they were powerless to do anything.

The police, finding that they could not protect the cars, turned their attention to the ringleaders of the mob and soon had a dozen or more under arrest. These were taken to the station-house but were soon bailed out by respectable citizens and in a half hour were back in the crowd ready to lead another attack.

The crowd made a rush for a man who was attempting to drive a car. "Hang the scab!" "Over with the car!" and similar expressions filled the air. The driver's name was Madison, and in an instant he was pulled over the dashboard, while several men belabored him over the head. The police charged and again the rocks began to fly. One huge brick struck Capt. Dawson in the middle of the back, doubling him up with pain, while the striker's fist landed beside his nose. But Patrolman Bob Smith fared worst of all. A big stone struck him just under his helmet on the back of his head, ripping open the scalp and hair and laying bare the bone.

The closing battle of the day occurred at 12:30 o'clock on South Meridian street as cars 81 and 91 were going south. The police were massed around the cars and in greater force than on any previous occasion, but the mob was not in the least daunted, and rushed to the attack as if eager for the fray.

At a signal from the leaders of the mob a hundred men surrounded the first car and hurled it from the track. The mules were unhitched and turned loose and the attack turned upon the second car, which was also ditched. This made eight cars that were off the tracks, and it was useless to attempt to bring out any more. Indeed, the crowd was increasing every moment, and messages were being sent to all the factories asking the employes to come out. As it was Saturday and, many of the mechanics of the city do not work Saturday afternoon, the mayor realized that greater trouble would be experienced if the attempt were continued, and he wisely determined to desist. The police were notified to attempt to get the cars to the barns, and when the crowd was assured that the only purpose in moving them was to put them in the barns no one interfered. The cars were therefore placed on the track and slowly taken to the barns, where they were put away for the day.

There were eighty-three arrests during the day, and of these sixty prisoners have been bailed out. The majority of those arrested were outsiders, who had no interest whatever in the strike, but were as active as the strikers themselves.

AN UNHAPPY MARRIAGE.

Secretary Blaine on His Son's Domestic Troubles—The Young Man Was the Victim of a Scheming Woman—The Elder Mrs Blaine Defended from the Censure of a South Dakota Judge.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 29.—Secretary Blaine has given to the press the following statement over his own signature regarding the separation of James G. Blaine, Jr., and his wife. Mr. Blaine says:

"Since the separation of my son and his wife, three and a half years ago, my family have silently borne every misrepresentation, every slanderous attack, every newspaper interview which it has pleased the now divorced wife to inspire. The one person aimed at has been Mrs. Blaine; and we have perhaps been at fault in allowing a horror of the public discussion of private matters, combined with a regard for the future of my grandson, to permit so much calumny to go unanswered.

"The last outrage of the kind embodied in the decision of the judge at Deadwood, S. D., assumes an official character which makes it impossible to remain longer silent. To remain silent would be to accept and perpetrate a great wrong to my wife, a greater wrong to my grandson than even a publication of the truth can inflict upon him. It is necessary in speaking that I should give a summary, as brief as possible, of the marriage and the incidents which followed it and led to the separation.

"A letter which I addressed to Rev. Thomas I. Ducey at the time of the marriage will distinctly state the important facts bearing upon that event."

In the letter to Rev. Thomas I. Ducey, who is rector of St. Leo's church, New York, Mr. Blaine censures him for performing the ceremony.

Mr. Blaine then continues his statement:

"When I wrote this letter I believed that Miss Nevins had no other responsibility in the marriage than in consenting to my son's appeal and was blameworthy for this alone. Since then I am prepared to say that the marriage was arranged by her far more than by my son: that she did everything to promote it, suggested every arrangement, anticipated and provided for every emergency, and that, in fact, but for her personal, active and untiring agency the marriage would never have taken place. In this she showed knowledge and forethought not to be expected in a woman of 21 years. It was thus that a boy 17 years and 10 months, in some respects inexperienced even for his age, was tempted from his school books and his tutor and blindly led to the altar by a young woman of fully 21 years, with entire secrecy contrived by himself and with all the instrumentalities of her device complete and exact."

After a statement of the events and circumstances connected with the marriage Mr. Blaine continues:

"I purpose next to show by a somewhat minute statement of facts and dates the falsity of the assertion that Mrs. Blaine broke up the marriage relations of my son and his wife. She did not see her daughter-in-law until May, 1887, eight months after the marriage, when, being in New York, the latter called upon her twice during her two days' stay. The next time she saw her was a month later. When about to sail for Europe, on the 8th of June, she was a single day in New York and saw the young woman on taking leave. At the end of fourteen months we returned from Europe and stopped two or three days in New York. We found that in our absence my son had not only spent his entire allowance but that he was deeply in debt. It was then arranged that both my son and his wife should come down to Augusta and have their future determined at a family council."

In this connection Mr. Blaine proposed that his son and his wife should occupy his Augusta home, and agreed to pay for fuel, light and servants, horse and carriage, and to give them an allowance of $2,500 a year. Mrs. Blaine, Jr., rejected this. Referring to young Mrs. Blaine's departure for New York during her husband's absence with his father at Ellsworth, Mr. Blaine says:

"Mrs. Blaine had strongly disapproved of her departure and had earnestly urged her to remain. She did not then dream that our son would not follow his wife or that the imminent final separation would come so soon. But she deprecated the angry, and to say the least, sudden departure, and the journey to New York alone with the infant and nurse. She did not, however, suspect that the young woman left with any less friendly feeling toward herself than towards every other member of the family except my son James.

"Finding the young woman determined to go, and foreseeing the difficulties in their path since my daughter-in-law utterly declined the provision I made for their support, Mrs. Blaine repeatedly bade her remember that she would at any moment receive the child for any length of time—for one year, or three years, or ten years, or for life; that she should receive, as all who know my wife will believe, the very best care and attention; that she would put his mother under no conditions whatever, and that whenever she wished the child to be returned to her he should be sent. The offer was not accepted, but it was not declined. It appeared to be received in the same friendly spirit in which it was given. Thus my daughter-in-law left my home, the only home which my son could provide for her.

"Just forty-four days after this willful departure she returned to my house accompanied by her mother, Mrs. Nevins, my grandson and his nurse. At the moment of their arrival there were in the house only Mrs. Blaine, who was ill, and the servants. Mrs. Blaine at once arose, dressed and went downstairs, having previously instructed her maid to do everything required for their comfort. This was the only time she ever met Mrs. Nevins. Neither lady advanced to greet her. No hand was extended to her, but from Mrs. Nevins, seconded by her daughter, came charges against her son and herself, so insulting and so violent that a servant was called in for the frankly expressed purpose of acting as a restraint upon the elder visitor.

"In this brief stay of two weeks with us, and on this one last visit of two hours, rests all the substantiation of the statement of the judge at Deadwood. Before leaving for the west I had advised with Mrs. Blaine in the event of the return of her daughter-in-law, and she acted upon my advice. Not a word since the separation has been written by her, nor has she seen my son's wife, except on the street in New York, when not a word was exchanged between them. My son was entirely free. No restraint was attempted or desired, or needed to insure separation. On the day of her departure he was as strongly determined as on the day of her divorce, not to resume his relations with her.

"Far be it from me to hold my son blameless; though when his youth, his uncompleted education, his separation from the influences of home, the exchange of a life full of hopes and anticipations for premature cares and uncongenial companionship are considered I hold him more sinned against than sinning. But his mother, at no time, in thought or word or deed attempted to separate this man from his wife. On the contrary, she did not fail, by liberality, by consideration and by extenuation, to foster in every practicable way their happiness—if happiness to them had been possible."

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—The shah of Persia has more than $35,000,000 worth of ornaments, gems and precious stones in one strong room, 20x14. There are scabbards in this treasury worth $1,000,000 each. The finest turquois in the world has a case all to itself. When leaving home the shah locks up his jewelry and "travels in paste."

—Prince Henry of Prussia, brother of the German emperor, is about to be made a rear-admiral of the imperial navy. The position was offered to the prince two years ago, but was declined on the ground that he wished to become perfectly familiar with the duties of a captain, which latter rank he has now held for three years.

—The late duke of Devonshire used to drive Leigh Hunt about in his carriage and was a warm friend of Dickens. The present duke, who for forty-eight years was marquis of Hartington, has not his father's literary tastes, but brings back to the family name the fine old political relish which it had in the days when a duchess of Devonshire went kissing for votes.

—William E. MacMaster's celebrated portrait of James Buchanan, which was painted at Wheatland in 1856, has been sold by Mrs. MacMaster to the president's brother, Dr. E. Y. Buchanan, of Philadelphia. The purchaser is the only surviving member of the family, and is now more than eighty years old. He was formerly rector of St. David's church, and retired in 1883.

—"Becky" Jones, who spent forty-five weeks in jail to prove that a woman can hold her tongue if she wants to, and whose silence as a witness in the Hammersly will case helped to carry the life interest in the great estate to the present duchess of Marlborough, says "the duchess never gave me as much as I could hold in my thumb nail." Miss Becky was a martyr to principle alone.

—Miss Kate Sanborn, the author of "An Abandoned Farm," is said to pride herself on the fact that she has supported herself ever since she was seventeen, her first venture being a school in a big room at her home. She seems, however, to have found lecturing the most profitable of all her various undertakings, and, perhaps, one of the pleasantest. Miss Sanborn's mother was the favorite niece of Daniel Webster.

—Mr. Hall Caine, the English novelist, is eccentric. Of his book, "The Scapegoat," a correspondent says: "I happen to know that it was written almost entirely during sleepless nights, or rather mornings of the summer, between the hours of from 2 to 3 a. m. and 6 and 7 a. m., while the day was dawning, the sun rising, and more than half the world lay asleep. Indeed, I wish I could quote an unpublished poem written after the work was done describing this experience in the manner of certain of Victor Hugo's lyrics."

—Senator Stanford is said to have a theory that magnetism may be developed not only in the human species, but in horses, and has made some experiments to that effect. He is credited with having said to one of his friends: "In short, my secret is this: "I cultivate the horse's magnetism and intelligence; I let him know I want his utmost, but I let him understand I will not press him too far; then he trusts me and does his best. They know me as children would, and manifest attachment for me. I have found that if you press a horse too far for an instant you may be weeks getting back where you were. From the colt days they know I am studying to help them, not to hurt them."

—Richard Redgrave, artist, records in his diary this amusing recommendation from an Irishman appointed to examine students competing for medals: "I should also recommend Margaret —— for a reward. —Tramp—"Here, I've done it. Fork over my pay." Druggist—"Done what? I am not aware that I hired you to do anything." Tramp—"Well now, if that aint what I call cool. BABY'S LETTER.

Only a make-believe letter,
Pencil marks, crooked and queer,
Droll curlycues, and fantastic
Zigzags, mixed up, out of gear.
A twisted up jumble of puzzles,
The Old Nick himself couldn't read,
But there's laughter and tears,
Hopes, yearning and fears,
For some loving heart in the screed.

Each quaint line of rubbishy nothing,
Jagged and all turned awry,
Tells to the eye of some mother,
A tale for a laugh or a cry.
Each cute little upstroke or downstroke,
That dot, and this dash over here,
Bent this way and that,
Make some heart pit-a-pat
With the thrill of a smile or a tear.

Beneath the blue sky of heaven,
No science, religion or art,
No poet, no painter or preacher,
Can thrill the love strings of the heart,
Like the pencil marks, criss-crossed and crooked,
Some upright, and others that nod,
Sweet babyhood's scrawl,
Meaning nothing at all
But containing a letter from God.

STORIES OF BEARS

SEVERAL old Pocono mountain settlers were telling bear stories the other evening.

"I was cutting across lots toward the railroad tracks below this station just at dusk one November day," said Caleb Sweet, "when I saw a bear on top of the water-tank, between here and Henryville. He was walking around the edge of the tank, and every little while he stopped and looked up and down the railroad. I crouched behind a fence as soon as I saw the bear, where I got a good sight of him. After he had walked around the top of the tank nine or ten times he gazed over the fields and scratched his right ear with his hind foot. Then he took another walk around the tank, and finally backed down the side next to the railroad. How it happened I don't know, but before the bear touched the ground, the water-pipe dropped, and a stream as big as the pipe could hold began to pour down on the ties. The bear jumped to one side as though the rushing water had startled him, but he didn't run away. He looked at the spout, and then he went to prancing around it, acting as if he liked to see it and hear it roar. Pretty soon the bear seemed to get the idea that it was a pretty good chance for him to take a bath, and right away he began to run back and forth under the pipe. The stream drenched him from his nose to his tail, and he kept dashing through it till he was as clean as a whistle. While the bear was taking his bath the track-walker came in sight from the direction of Cresco. He saw the water spouting on the track, and he immediately ran toward the tank as fast as he could to turn it off. He didn't see the bear, and the bear didn't notice him till he was pretty close to the tank. When the bear caught sight of the track-walker, however, he legged it for the fence and started to climb over it within three feet of where I was. I had a beetle that I had been splitting rails with, and as the bear climbed over I hauled off and gave him a blow on the head with it that laid him out. He kicked and tried to come to, but another blow fixed him. He had the cleanest fur I ever saw on a bear. By that time the track-walker had got the water stopped, and when I told him the story he was mad at me for not scaring the bear away."

Porter Seward told the next story. "One fall," he said, "I was hunting on the barrens between the Buckhill creek and the middle branch of Broadhead's creek. Thirty or forty rods away I saw a bear dancing around something on the ground, and I laid my rifle across a stump and got behind it. I watched the bear just as

HE RAISED THE STONE AS HIGH AS HE COULD.

Mr. Sweet did the one on the water tank, knowing that I could reach him with a bullet the minute he undertook to make himself scarce. From his actions I judged that the bear was angry about something, but I couldn't see what he was dancing around, and I kept my rifle aimed at him, so as to fire the instant I saw that he was going to leave the open for the brush. The bear kept hopping in a circle, quickly jumped to one side every little while and appeared to be getting madder and madder. All of a sudden the bear waddled away a few yards. I had a bead on him, and I was almost ready to pull the trigger, when the bear stopped. I wanted to see what he was going to do next, and so I didn't shoot. He pawed in the dirt a spell and then he picked up a round stone, bigger than his head. He took the stone in his paws, hugged it to his brisket and walked on his hind feet toward the spot where I'd first seen him. When he got to the spot he walked around it a couple of times, and then he raised the stone as high as he could and threw it on the ground. The bear then danced around the stone for two or three minutes, when he suddenly turned tail and took a bee line for the brush. Seeing that he was going to leave for good, I banged away at him and brought him to a stop, finishing him with another bullet. I was anxious to find out why the bear had thrown the stone on the ground, and so I got a stick and rolled it over. Under the stone lay a dead rattlesnake, coiled up and as flat as a flounder."

"That reminds me," said Lenk Houghton, "of a bear I saw playing with a pumpkin one Sunday morning up on Cromwell's hill. I was working for a farmer up there, and in the fall we fed pumpkins to the cows in a lot next to a piece of woods. One of the pumpkins hadn't been cracked, and that morning I saw a bear march out of the woods and begin to play with it like a kitten with a ball of yarn. When it had cuffed the pumpkin around for awhile the bear tossed the big vegetable so high that it broke into pieces when it came down, and the bear then disappeared in the woods. That afternoon I put another pumpkin there, and before it was light the next morning I took a repeating rifle and hid in some bushes probably fifty paces from where it lay. A little after daybreak a bear walked out of the woods and started to paw the pumpkin around on the ground. Pretty soon a smaller bear ran out and tried to take the pumpkin away, and the big bear grabbed the pumpkin in its paws and made for the woods. The little one chased him and drove him back, and while they were quarreling I banged away three times and killed both of them."

"Eleven years ago last April," said James Prat, "I found what no Pocono hunter ever did before or since. I was hunting wild cats on Scrub Oak ridge, and I wasn't thinking of bear at all, when I saw an enormous she bear stealing through the scrub oaks. I shot her twice with buckshot, and although she was wounded badly she kept up until she reached her nest, where she soon died. Her nest was on the barren, with hardly any protection. It was made of several bushels of grass and leaves, and in it I found four cubs, all nicely covered up. I raised them all, and in the fall I sold them."

"A year or so before the war," said Abner Handford, "four of us were peeling bark on Levis' mountain. Early one June morning a pack-peddler started up the wood road on his way to the Dutch Flats. Half an hour later we set out for the bark-peeling, and on our way up we heard the peddler yelling murder. In a moment we saw him running down the hill with a bear close behind him. Before he got to us his toe caught in a root and he stumbled to his knees. His pack went over his head and struck against a stump and flew open, and pins and needles, hooks and eyes and suspenders flew in every direction. The frightened peddler got to his feet in a hurry, but instead of looking after his pack he ran past us and kept yelling murder. The bear kept chasing him, and when it came along we knocked it down with our axes and soon killed it. Then one of us ran after the peddler, and it was half an hour before we could make him believe that the bear was dead."

"I had a hog once that always followed me all over the place and into the woods," said Henry Morris. "One fall I went up in Dark Hollow to set a bear trap, and when I got in the woods I found the hog at my heels. While I was setting the trap the hog wandered away, and when I got ready to start for home I heard it squealing up on the side of the hill. In two minutes it came running down through the woods right toward the trap. A bear was after it. The hog leaped over the trap just as the bear was going to strike, it and the bear got caught in the trap and the hog went squealing down the hill. Then I went home, got my rifle, and shot the bear."—Cresco (Pa.) Cor. N. Y. Tribune.

NOT SO TERRIBLE.

A Supposed Heavy Villain Proves to Be Quite Harmless.

A lady who has been traveling abroad, relates an adventure which befell her in Italy, in a railway train. Her husband put her into a compartment alone, and went to attend to the luggage. After he had gone, a villainous-looking fellow got in, and presently the train started off, the husband not appearing. The lady was naturally a good deal disturbed, and the way in which the stranger looked at her did not tend to diminish her agitation. Suddenly, still with his eyes fixed upon her, the man took from his pocket a large clasp-knife and opened it. Then he rose, and deliberately cut from the window blinds their cords and began to knot them together. The lady was terrified almost to death. She expected to be strangled on the spot, and began appealing to the stranger to spare her. He only laughed brutally, answering her in Italian, of which she did not understand a word. Then he pulled off his coat and waistcoat, and just as the terrified woman was almost prepared to fling herself out of the compartment of the swiftly moving train, he knotted the cords so as to piece out a broken suspender, put on his coat and waistcoat, and sat quietly down in a corner, where he went quickly to sleep. The husband, who had by mistake got into a wrong compartment just as the train was starting, and who joined his wife at the next station, found her on the verge of hysterics from the effects of the fright she had undergone.—San Francisco Argonaut.

A Stamp We Never See.

Persons who are more or less familiar with the ordinary workings of Uncle Sam's great mail delivery system are possibly unaware that there is a complete set of postage stamps that are never seen by the general public and, furthermore, that are never used on letters or packages and cannot be purchased. They are what are called newspaper and periodical stamps, and range in price from one cent to $60 each. They are used, as their name indicates, in the newspaper delivery service. Newspapers and periodicals sent to subscribers are not stamped, but are paid for by the pound. When received they are weighed and a receipt given for the amount of postage. On the stub of the receipt a stamp equal to the amount of postage paid is affixed and canceled. At regular periods these stubs are forwarded to the auditors of the department at Washington, where they are compared with the accounts of the office from which they are received, and if found correct are then destroyed. —Philadelphia Record.

—"Well, did the train they missed run off the track and kill a lot of people," asked Fangle, as Cumso stopped. "No; but something dreadful really did happen." "What?" "When we got back to the house there were seven relatives from the country sitting on the porch waiting for us. They staid a month."

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—The best way to egg pastry is to turn the whole white of an egg over it, allowing it to pass over every portion; then turning it off. When the white of an egg is used in this way one white will be sufficient to egg three or four pies.

—Cabbage Salad: Yolks of two eggs well beaten, one teaspoonful salt, one of pepper, two of sugar, one of mustard, two of butter, four tablespoonfuls vinegar, cook over hot water; stir constantly until it thickens. This is sufficient for one quart chopped cabbage; pour over it while hot and mix thoroughly; then form in a mound, and serve cold.—Home.

—Royal Pudding: Soak a box of gelatine in a pint of cold water for an hour, then stir into it three teacupfuls of boiling water in which the grated rind of two oranges has been boiled; add the juice of four oranges, a scant pint of granulated sugar and a teacupful of canned cherries, drained and candied. Pour all into a buttered mold and when hardened serve with boiled custard or white sauce.—N. Y. World.

—Fried Corn Muffins: One cup fine white meal, one-half teaspoon salt, two tablespoon sugar, one pint boiling milk, two eggs, one-eighth yeast cake, flour to stiffen. Mix the meal, salt and sugar. Add gradually the boiling milk; when cool add the yeast dissolved in a little water, the eggs, well-beaten, and flour to make a stiff drop batter. Rise over night. Drop from a tablespoon into deep, hot fat.—Chicago Herald.

—Sago or Tapioca Soup: One-quarter cup sago, one cup cold water, one quart veal-stock, one cup hot cream, two eggs, yolks, salt and pepper. Soak the sago in cold water an hour, then pour on one pint of boiling water, and cook in a double boiler. When tender, stir it into the hot veal-stock. Let it simmer ten minutes, add the seasoning and cream. Beat the yolks of the eggs light, and mix them with a cup of the boiling broth. Turn into the tureen and stir briskly as you pour in the hot broth.—Boston Budget.

—Dried Apple Shortcake: Make a good rich cake with butter and lard or rich sour cream; have the dough as for any shortcake. Roll it out half an inch in thickness, then spread it over with butter, fold it together and roll it to fit the tin in which you will bake it. After it is baked, split it open where it was folded, and place between a layer of dried apples which have been stewed as for sauce and seasoned with nutmeg and sweetened; over this spread thick sweet cream and place the other half of the crust over it. Serve while hot.—Prairie Farmer.

—Gateau of Veal: Take a pound of cold roast veal and three-quarters of a pound of cold boiled ham, and cut both into small, thin slices. Butter the inside of a rather deep pie-dish and arrange in it the meat; put it in layers. Between each layer put some very thin slices of hard-boiled egg, and season with salt, pepper, a squeeze of lemon juice, pound mace and a sprinkling of finely-chopped mushrooms. Cover the top of the meat with three or four folds of buttered paper, and bake in a moderate oven for one hour. When cold, turn out and serve, garnished with parsley and slice of onion.—Boston Herald.

AMONG THE JEWELERS.

Some Very Pretty Trinkets That Are Now the Fashion.

Cob-webbing is used like a ribbon to tie up the hair.

Leather jewel boxes are luxuriously mounted with perforated silver ornament.

A spray of holly with coral berries is one of the new contributions to the season.

A silver box for playing cards is appropriately decorated by five cards and the inscription below: "A good hand."

Manicure files, button hooks and paper knives have silver handles, the surface of which are cross-thatched.

Square ivory handles with incised lines for ornaments are attached to the tea and coffee pots in some of the new silver services.

Bread and cake dishes of silver are on low plain stands oblong in shape, slightly hollowed in the center, with flaring ends and a broken edge of ornament.

Lorgnon sticks of perforated silver masquerade in the shape of paper knives, and opera-glass holders take the forms of the caduceau, Mecury's emblem.

A shrimp salad bowl is shaped like an old and slightly-battered tin pan with wavelike indentations over the gilt interior and shapes of sea monsters, dimly seen as if through water.

The latest service of the bowknot is the very last that might be expected. A set of after-dinner coffee cups of Royal Worcester are bound with gilt ribbons tied in a bowknot at the side. It is a charming device as well as novel. Each cup stands on a little gilt base.

Silver lace pins are larger than ever, and more artistic and novel in design. Natural leaf sprays take the lead. A couple of ivy leaves with tendrils laid across and a leaf bug, bunches of cattails, blades of wheat, rose leaves, leaves with fine feathery fronts, sprigs of holly treated with some bug or creeping thing, in Japanese styles, are among them. In designs simply novel are a riding-whip with saddles and stirrups thrown across, three camels, anchors and tackle, a crab net with a crab.—Jewelers' Circular.

A Pretty Luncheon.

A few days ago twelve young women received daintily-written invitations to attend "An Old Maids' Luncheon"—whatever that might be—evidently something extremely pleasant from the alacrity with which those invitations were accepted. At all events, on the appointed day a dozen pretty faces, belonging to girls with dainty toilets, were gathered around a table loaded with delicacies. In the center of the table were banked large bunches of field daisies, but alas! their former companions could scarcely have recognized them, so changed had they become. Each blossom had been converted into the head of a little old lady by clipping the white petals, with the exception of two, cap and strings were formed, while pen and ink had placed eyes, nose and mouth in each yellow center. At each plate were placed a few sprays of pussy willow, strangely suggestive of old maidism. In spite of this, the faces were unusually beaming and the tongues as lively as only girls' can be on such occasions. After the luncheon the "old maids" left the dining-room, and as each one passed through the doorway she received a pretty beribboned basket containing a "real live" kitten.—N. Y. Times.

IT MADE HIM TIRED.

He Was Determined to Have No More Nonsense About Dinah.

I was talking with a colored man who had been sweeping off the depot platform and making himself generally useful around the place, when a strange colored man, who had evidently walked a long ways, turned aside and sat down on a barrel of salt close to us. It was two or three minutes before he spoke, and then he asked of the employe:

"Was your name Misser Johnson, sah?"

"Yes, sah," was the reply.

"You belong right heah, do you?"

"Yes, sah. Who was you, sah?"

"I was Misser Brown, sah."

"Brown—Brown! I reckon I nebber did meet up wid you befo'?"

"Reckon not. I libs over at Tillsbury, sah."

"Yes, I see. An' did you cum ober heah to see me?"

"Yes, sah. Did you dun git married las' y'ar?"

"Yes."

"Did you dun git jined to a tall woman wid a sore eye an' fo' front teef out?"

"Mighty spry about gittin' round?"

"Yes."

"Spits on her hands an' goes 'ha!' when she chops wood, same as a man?"

"Dat's my wife, sah. Did you use to know her?"

"Right well, sah. She was my wife, but she dun runn'd away las' year. I'ze come to take her home."

"Nigger," said the man with the broom, as he stepped back and assumed a pose, "I'ze a good-natured man, an' I doan' wont no row! Do you know how many strange niggers hev cum along heah in de las' six months and claimed dat woman?"

"No, sah."

"'Bout seben, sah—'bout seben—an' you make eight? I dun tole 'em all about it, an' explained de hull case, an' took up my valuable time, which belongs to de Nashville railroad, an' does you know what ails me now? Does you know, sah?"

"No, sah."

"Well, sah. I'ze dun tired out wid dis pussin'! Dat's my cabin right ober dar. You go ober an' see Dinah. If she dun wants to go back wid you all right, if she dun refuse den you'd better strike a gallop an' git outer dis burg as fast as you kin, fur I feel a bilin' goin' on widin me an' if I turn loose I shall mangle you all to squash afore you knows it!"

The strange man arose and walked over to the cabin and entered it. Three minutes later he reappeared, took one long, lingering look around him, and then struck a gait and threw mud over his head as he got out of town.—Detroit Free Press.

THE SICK ROOM.

Some Suggestions Concerning Its Temperature and Ventilation.

Physicians tell us the proper temperature of a sick room should be from sixty-five to seventy degrees Fahrenheit, and the heat should not go below or much above these points. Abundance of fresh air and sunshine is the rule in all cases, except where the order of the physician prohibits the light. There is far more danger of the patient becoming enervated by close, foul air than there is from ventilation. English physicians insist that an open fire is a necessity to the proper ventilation of a sick room, and an eminent authority on this subject says: "I do not consider any room suitable for a patient to occupy during a prolonged illness where there is not an open fire burning on the hearth, in order to secure proper ventilation."

A tight stove or furnace register will not serve any such purpose. On the contrary, the stove throws out a dry heat which can only be partly counteracted by keeping boiling water on the stove. It does not solve in any way the problem of ventilation. The furnace register too often brings up a current of foul air from the cellar or the kitchen, into which the cold air box opens. Unfortunately it is quite the exception to have the cold air box open outdoors, as it should. Even when it so opens, the furnace register does not assist materially in ventilating the room. One of the best methods of removing odors is to take a shovel of burning coals, sprinkle it with coffee and pass it around the room. Where there is infectious disease a deodorizing solution should be obtained from the physician and used in the water in which the utensils of the room, the bedding and clothing of the patient are washed.—Scientific American.

The March Wide Awake

is a timely and attractive issue of the favorite magazine. Its frontispiece, illustrating Miss Brastow's characteristic story of "A March Mood," capitally suggests the lingering snow of the departing winter, and there are March pictures and poems suitable to the season. Mrs. Harriet Maxwell-Converse concludes her entertaining chapters on Iroquois life with a spirited account of the Indian children's "Fire-fly Song;" Lieut.-Col. Thorndike contributes to his series of "One Man's Adventures," an account of his startling experience "As War Correspondent." The serial stories, "Jack Brereton's Three Months' Service," by Maria McIntosh Cox, and "The Lance of Kanana," by the entertaining story-teller who conceals his identity under the Arabic "Abd el Ardavan." The poetry is from such verse-makers as Herbert D. Ward, Elsie Kendall, Clara Doty Bates and others. The Men and Things department is full of entertaining things worth remembering.

Wound up

—the man or woman who's "run-down." Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery sets the wheels going. It starts the torpid liver into healthful action, purifies and enriches the blood, cleanses, repairs, and strengthens the system, and restores health and vigor. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it sets at work all the processes of digestion and nutrition, and builds up flesh and strength.

For all scrofulous humors and blood-taints, and even Consumption (or Lung-scrofula), if taken in time, it's a positive remedy.

Unlike the sarsaparillas, which claim to be good for the blood in March, April, and May, "Golden Medical Discovery" works equally well at all seasons.

Unlike other blood-purifiers, too, it's guaranteed to benefit or cure, in every case, or your money is returned.

On these terms, it's the cheapest. You pay only for the good you get. But it's the best—or it couldn't be sold so.

Before the cause of consumption was known (that was only a few years ago) we did not know how Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil did so much good in consumption and in the conditions that lead to consumption.

The explanation is interesting. We send it free in a book on CAREFUL LIVING.

"August Flower"

"I am ready to testify under oath that if it had not been for August Flower I should have died before this. Eight years ago I was taken sick, and suffered as no one but a dyspeptic can. I employed three of our best doctors and received no benefit. They told me that I had heart, kidney, and liver trouble. Everything I ate distressed me so that I had to throw it up. August Flower cured me. There is no medicine equal to it." LORENZO F. SLEEPER, Appleton, Maine.

—M. Conzet, one of Greenwood's prosperous farmers, was in to call on us on Wednesday. He says the Cleveland priiciples in politics suits him, the man cuts no figure, but must be one that will stand by the principles. This is good sound Democracy for you.

--Martin Conzet and wife, of Greenwood attended the Band Boy's entertainment on Tuesday evening. They were highly pleased with the exercises, and think Delano need not go away from home for music unless they are prepared to pay a high price.

—The entertainment given by the Delano Cornet Band, on Tuesday evening is highly spoken of by every one. The music was fine and the acting good. Prof Coolen is said to have brought down the house with his vocal music. The bear was one of the interesting features of the exhibition. The boys are highly pleased, the attendence being large, and the receipts amounting to. $59.

--A very old way of collecting a debt seems to be in vogue with our School Authorities. Some time ago Charley Wiese, as he says, was walking through the hall way, kicking the snow off his shoes when he dropped through a register in the floor. On being asked to pay for it his father refused to do so on the ground that the register ought not to break so easily. This week young Charley was sent home to remain until the register was paid for. Suspended for his fathers debts! If the parent is liable for the breakage, it seems there is some law for collecting, and that the boy should not be suspended in this manner and for this reason.

—On Saturday afternoon Mr. Thomas Berneck came near drowning in the pond on lower River Street. He got off the floating sidewalk and started toward his sister's house and fell down, the ice not being strong enough to bear him held him on his back where he struggeled until help arrived. Being under the influence of the intoxicating bowl, as well as in the water and his age against him he would doubtless have succumbed to grim death in a short time. Had it been night time when no one was near this would probably have been the result. The street commissioner has since put a temporary bridge over the sidewalk.

—Fresh Fish for sale at the new Butcher Shop.

—Quite a number of men and teams were engaged on Wednesday in hauling a car load of lumber to Mr. Shraders farm on the Montrose road where a fine new barn is to be built.

—C. R. Carlton of Independence left an exhibition in our office on Wednesday a large bone which he found on his farm last fall at a depth of five feet below the surface the bone appears to have been one of the vertebra of some large animal.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25, 1892.

The good sense of the Democrats of the House has about put an end to all danger of a clash in the party over the free coinage bill. A caucus was held last night; not for the purpose of blinding anyone against his will, but to allow a free interchange of opinion as to what ought to be done, and the prediction is made by those high in the party councils that a special rule will be reported from the committee on Rules fixing a date for the consideration of the free coinage bill. The free binding-twine bill is to be called up next week and a final vote will be taken on it, if the present programme is adherred to, on the first Monday in April. It is expected that the date for the consideration of the free coinage bill will be set for the same week in which the binding-twine bill is passed, and that it will be disposed of before the other tariff bills, which have the right of way at all times, are called up.

Senator Sherman has had no love for Mr. Blaine since the national republican convention of 1880, as he has always believed that Mr. Blaine knocked him out of being nominated for President, by that convention, and his resolution which was adopted calling upon the President to inform the Senate of the proceedings recently had with the representatives of the Dominion of Canada and of the British government as to arrangements for reciprocal trade with Canada, bodes no good to the man from Maine. It is believed that Senator Sherman, who is credited with having said that Mr. Blaine was still in the field for the republican nomination, thinks that the publication of the proceedings of the recent conference will bring out some facts not altogether creditable to the Secretary of state.

Mr. Harrison and his family have gone to Virginia Beach for a week's holiday. His extraordinary exertions in getting that letter from Mr. Blaine tired him out.

Senator Bate made a short but strong speech against the Paddock pure food bill, this week, which he said was a measure that would turn the Agricultural department into a huge partisan political machine, as under it there would be commissioned a multitude of employees, who might be stationed along the railroads of the country and of course, at places convenient to voting precincts, where they could help carry out the political orders received from headquarters. Another reason why Mr. Bate opposes the bill is that he thinks it a matter belonging exclusively to the several States, with which the general government has nothing to do. Senator Coke is also opposed to the bill, which he says attempts an utterly impracticable thing in trying to regulate and take care of the food, drink and medicine of $65.000.000 people, which never has been done and never can be done. If it becomes, a law he thinks the country would be overrun with spies and informers, without accomplishing anything, because the people would never accept the dictum of a bureau at Washington on what they should eat or drink, or what medicine they should take.

A bill amending the naturalization laws has been favorably reported to the House from the Judiciary committee. It provides that no alien who has ever been convicted of a felony or other infamous crime or misdemeanor involving mural turpitude, or who is an anarchist or polygamist, or who immigrated to this country in violation of any of its laws, or who cannot read the constitution of the United States shall be naturalized. It requires five years continuous residence in the United States and one year in the State in which application is made to become a citizen.

The big monopolists received $1,711,061 in draw-backs on tin cans manufactured to carry their products abroad, from Oct. 1, 1890, when the McKinley tariff went into effect, up to Dec. 31, 1891, according to a report sent to the House by the Treasury department, in answer to a resolution calling for information on the subject; but in reality that large amount was paid between July 1, 1891 and Dec. 31 of the same year,—just six months—for the tin schedule of the McKinley law did not go into effect until the first of last July.

Congress is just beginning to pull itself together after its Chicago picnic.

Mr. Harrison this week sent a special World's fair message to Congress, in which he treats the question of a $5,000,000 appropriation in a very diplomatic manner, throwing the responsibility of determining the matter upon the Congressional committees, and adding some "taffy" for the exposition.

Representative Hatch says his anti-option bill will not interfere with legitimate transactions, but is aimed at the fiction speculations, which he thinks are on a par with any other form of gambling. He is confident that it will be supported by at least two-thirds of the House. The hearings have been completed, but the committee will take time to thoroughly digest them before reporting the bill

LITTLE POTUS.

Born—Lived—Died in the Criminal Classes.

BY JULIA MCNAIR WRIGHT.

IN THREE PARTS.

PART 1.

BORN IN THE CRIMINAL CLASSES.

Once upon a time there was a child born in New York—a representative baby—whose pedigree and getting into and out of this world we propose to trace. He was always an outcast; had never anyone to call him by his name—was known only by his patronymic with a diminutive before it. They called him Little Potus.

The great-grandfather of Little Potus was Deacon Potus, a New Englander, who owned a large farm, devoted chiefly to apple orchards. The Deacon had a small distillery where he made his fruit and the fruit of his neighbors into a mighty decoction known as "Apple Jack."

The Deacon was a man of wit, and for a sign over his establishment and for lables on his bottles and headings for his advertisments, he invented a little picture—an apple couchant d'or over a jackass rampart gules. This read "Apple Jack". Some evil-minded boys called the old gentleman "Deacon Jackass" therefrom. Despite the name, he was a worthy man. He paid his debts, went regularly to church, supported the parson, and, had he lived in these enlightened days, would have shut up his shop, burnt his sign, and joined the temperance party.

There was no "temperance opinion" in his day, and apple-jack was esteemed a necessity and associated with flour, meal, and potatoes in the Public Mind.

Old Deacon Potus took a dram of his apple-jack every morning as an eye-opener; at noon he had a strong jorum to aid his digestion; at supper a glass of something hot to rest him after a day's labors; at nine he had a nightcap of apple-jack, hot water and sugar and then slept the sleep of the just. He never adulterated his whisky except with water and burnt sugar, that it might not be over-proof He never exceeded his four drams—at six, twelve five and nine. He came of a vigorous race, worked hard, fed plainly, went to bed early, died at eighty. He was esteemed a rich man, married his four daughters well, and gave them each a thousand dollars. He left his only son ten thousand.

Potus II., grandfather of Little Potus, was a dashing young man. He moved to Boston and set up a whole-sale liquor store. Being in haste to get rich, and considering that water is cheaper than whisky, he used a large amount of water in his stock. To give the decotion a proper "thug," he further used sulphie acid, alum, tannin, strychnine, elderberries, fusel-oil, prussic acid, copper, and quince pepper. He was made an alderman, kept a carriage, and was a high liver. He became enormously plethoric, drove hard bargains, was often carried to bed. Only one of his children lived to grow up. Potus II. died of apoplexy, aged 58.

His son, Potus III.—father, later, of little Potus—was then twenty-two years old. The family affairs were found less flourishing than had been supposed. The heir took what property he could gather, went to New York, and opened a retail liquor-store. One day while he was drunk he married his best bar-maid—Polly Quaff. Miss Quaff's grandfather had kept a tavern, her father had been a drunken hostler, her mother had "always needed a deal of beer to keep her up." Miss Quaff at three years of age could toss off her mug of beer, and demanded her ale or porter at every meal. She was fat and florid, but her flesh was flabby and she had a watery eye. At the bar she could chat and quaff with the best of them, and would drink with whoever stood treat. After they were married she and Potus III. each drank harder. Potus had tremens, and Polly seldom went to bed quite sober. Potus beat his wife, and Polly—being strong-armed—retaliated with spirit. The liquor-store soon passed out of the hands of Potus, he went into bankruptcy, was sold out by the sheriff, found in every depth a deeper depth, until a little doggery on Water street was the last establishment that bore the name of Potus.

Our illomened couple had various children. The first-born was smothered by its father in his drunken sleep; the second died of an overdose of paregoric administered by its intoxicated mother. Mrs. Potus one winter night forgot to take the thirdborn into bed with her, and left it lying promiscuously on a table with her brandy bottle and an empty plate, and in the morning the babe was found perished with cold. The fourth was born dead. The fifth took a cold while its mother was staggering about the street with it in her arms, and it had been dead with croup some hours before Potus or Polly discovered their mutual loss. The sixth child was let fall by Mrs. Potus, and the doctor who looked after the ward poor, took it to a children's hospital, where, for four crippled years, it experienced the only happiness tha ever fell to the share of any of Polly Potus' children. At the end of the four years it died of the injury sustained in the fall.

Potus and his wife were distrained for the rent of their doggery and put into the street. Mrs. Potus then opened a little corner stall, where she sat all day, a dirty shawl over her head, her grimy hands clasped about her knees a whisky bottle in her pocket, and before her on a board some dingy pies and tarts, withered apples, ancient oranges, and other dangerous and half-decayed comestibles. She and Potus picked up their meals where they could, and slept, when they remembered to go home, in a damp cellar, lit only when the door was open upon the dark, stone steps. A mouldy bedtick, a pair of ragged, dirty quilts, an iron pot, a usually fireless hearth, a stool that had begun life as a yellow-painted chair, and half a table, made the entire furniture of the last heir and grandson of the respected Deacon Potus.

At last the neighborhood, vile and beggarly as it was, began to make certain remarks:

"It's a shame," said the women, "her as knows nothing of caring for a child. This 'un will go like the rest."

"Wake up, Mrs. Potus, and quit drinking; clean yourself up a bit, and try an' get some rags together for your baby."

"Potus, you're not worth the name of a man if you can't hold off the liquor a few weeks an' get work on the docks—a strong fellow like you, not forty—and get a proper room and bed for your wife, an' a few dishes with food to put into 'em. Them as has children should do for 'em."

Neither Potus nor Polly heeded these remarks.

"What are you going to do about it?" demanded the women in chorus.

"It's nothin' to me," said Potus.

"Pitch the young 'un in the gutter," said Polly.

"I declare, if your heart an' feelin's an' bowels ain't clean burnt out with rum!" cried Mrs. Chance, the magnate of the neighborhood.

Dame Chance applied to the local magistrate and the poormaster to know if there were any legal way of developing natural feelings and behavior in Mr. and Mrs. Potus for their unborn child. She was told "nothing could be done about it at present.

There came a raw, foggy, miserable day. Mrs. Potus had sold nothing for nearly a week. Her fruit was a mass of rottenness, her pies and cakes were sodden and mouldy, her bottle was empty. She waved to and fro, sitting on the wet walk, her back against a wet wall, her ruined stock in trade at her knee. As she swayed to and fro she moaned, and maudlin tears ran down her face. Her woe moved a passerby, who threw two dimes into her lap. She staggered into the nearest den and got her bottle filled with gin.

After she reeled into her cellar that night, wet to the skin, she dropped herself in her wet rags upon her rotten bed. Mrs. Chance followed her. Presently, Mrs. Chance went for some other neighbors. Mrs. Potus' cellar was cold and dark. The women consulted a little and went their ways. Soon they returned—one with fuel, another with a pan of water, a third with a lamp, and Mrs. Chance with a bundle of half-worn baby clothes. As they stumbled down into the wet and gloom, they heard—not the moans of Polly Potus, but the wail of a little child.—Nat. Temp. Advocate

IN MEMORY OF FLORENCE IRENE.

BY F. F. AND A. M.

A little flower was given to us
Little precious Irene,
Her short, sweet life was full of love
So gentle and serene.

She was a blossom sent from God
But spared so short a time,
Our life and light, our love
And round our hearts did twine.

Her little shoes and precious things
Are scattered round on every side,
We never thought how dear they were
Until our darling died.

Our thoughts are all of Heaven,
Where she in peace doth dwell,
What is our loss is Heaven's gain
For He doeth all things well.

Thanks.

We take this way of expressing our heartfelt thanks to the many kind friends who did so much for us in our late sorrow and spoke so many words of comfort.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired:
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall:
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

WM. QUINN, Chairman Democratic County Com.

THE tariff discussion has been begun in Congress in earnest. Messrs McMillin, of Tennessee, and Dingley, of Maine are the leaders.

IN a recent number of SCHOOL EDUCATION is an article entitled "an Excellent Plan" referring to the use of county paper, in aiding the work of education. Some very good points are given. The article ends with this sound conclusion. "The thing we feel entirely sure of is that a judicious use of well established county papers will pay." A few short spicy items concerning education would be acceptable to almost any country paper.

SOME of our fellow townsmen seem to think the proper thing to do in village and township elections is to put up one ticket dividing the offices and have no contests so far as politics goes. This plan we have endeavored to discourage, claiming it was an admission of the unfitness for office of democrats when in the majority as is the case here to stand in the back ground and allow the minority to govern. We are pleased to find the Litchfield News Ledger, a republican paper, in a republican town, entertain's the same views and has advocated the same thing. Begin at the bottom be a democrat or be a republican or whatever you may, advocate your principles.

THE greatest blizzard for years swept over our state Wednesday. Snow filled the air and the wind carried it along at a very rapid rate; the thermometers showed a temperature of not far from zero, most of the time; the snow was soft, fine and sticky, and was drifted into all kinds of fantastical shapes, and driven through crevices in residences, barns and other buildings where people would least expect to find it. In 1873, in January one of the hardest storms on record broke over Minnesota causing great loss of life and property, but that was in mid winter. In 1872 March 6 a three days storm set in causing a suspension of travel on rail roads in the southern part of the state for three days. More snow fell than, we think, for the balance of the winter. Had not Wednesday's blizzard came along our farmers would doubtless be at work seeding now instead of shoveling snow.

Village Election.

The village election passed off as quietly as usual. On Saturday evening a Democratic Caucus was held, at the city hall. And a ticket nominated with Andrew Hanseman at the head. Andrew who had said all along that he would not run on being notified refused to accept the nomination: The village committee then arranged the ticket by placing John Coolen at the head, N. K. Coffin as Trustee. A People's ticket apeared in the field on Tuesday morning with John Borch at the head. Joe Cramer Trustee; O. L. Billings, Recorder; R. M. Walter, Justice of the Peace, the balance of ticket being the same as that nominated at the caucus. The day was an uncommonly fine one for the time of year, considerable electioneering was done but the regular Democratic ticket was elected except N. K. Coffin who was defeated five votes by Joe Cramer the People's ticket nominatee. The ticket elected is as follows. President John Coolen; Trusteps, Chas Wiese, Joe Cramer, Ennis N. Brandon; Recorder, J. C. Hitz; Treasurer, L. P. Probst; Justice of the Peace, T. J. Catlin; Constables John Ball and B. Rilley.

Not in a Party and Not in a Dilemma.

BY M. E. BENNETT.

Mr. Tanner states that one half of the voters in the union believe in the purity of the Democratic party and the other that of the Republican party. We say that is not true. I could name twenty voters that do not believe that of either, and do not vote in either party and two out of five of every Democrat or Republican to whom I have spoken on this subject say that the parties are corrupt but we can not make them better. Mr. Tanner thinks that every patriotic American believes in equal rights we know that. That is the reason they are leaving the old parties.

Even though the present political parties are corrupt it would not follow that the government should not own and control the railroads telegraphs etc. These parties are not immortal and present indications point to their having a short lease of power. But even if they should remain in power, the very best way to purify them would be to remove the chief causes of corruption to do away with private ownership and control of the above named monopolies. Every railroad or other monopoly employee who can be controlled by fear or favor is voted in the interest of these monopolies and against the interest of the people. He is not responsible to the people but to the corporation. Under government ownership he would be directly responsible to the whole people and hence less liable to be corrupt. Besides the millionaire monopoly king who made his millions by virtue of special government privileges, will use all the corrupting power of his millions to save these privileges and procure new ones; and that corrupting influence is felt from the private voter to the United States supreme Judge. Under government ownership there would be no special privileges to give away hence this corrupting power would be removed.

There would be no need at all of increasing patronage. The principal of local self government could be applied to the railroads, telegraphs, etc. Nine tenths of the officers might be elected directly by the people they serve. The Constitution might be easily applied to this change.

We would then have a railroad and telegraph system which would be as efficient and impartial as is the postal service, and all must acknowledge that the postoffice service is at present far in advance of any other public service.

To sum up, then the government should operate the railroads because it would give better service and tend to purify politics. Space forbids detail and we have no more time to give to this subject. Mr. Tanner is getting much light on this question through the F. S. and H. and we think R. T. Ely on the subject of railroads might be carefully perused by him with profit to himself and readers. There is a limit to public indulgence and we think we have reached it and beg to end our side of the controversy here. We will leave this subject to some one with more time and talent I wish to thank the Editor of the GAZETTE for the use of his columns.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, Mch. 4, 1892.

The man that says the present House of Representatives is a do-nothing body either makes a wilful misstatement or is ignorant of the facts, which speak for themselves. The work of the House is far ahead of that of the House of the last Congress at the same period. For instance, it has already passed three apropriation bills—the Urgent Deficiency, the Military Academy and the Indian—and is making rapid progress in the consideration of the fourth one—the District of Columbia,—while the first appropriation bill was not passed by the House of the last Congress until the 21st of March. Besides this, the reporting of three tariff bills as early as the first of March is something unheard of in Congressional history. In addition to what has been done on the floor of the House is the hard work done by the committees, which was never further advanced at this period in any first session. To give a clear idea of how far this work is advanced, Representative Catchings stated that if it were necessary every one of the appropriation bills; except the general deficiency, which is necessarily the last one taken up by the committee, could be reported to the House within a week. Instead of being slow, the majority of the House have proven themselves hustlers, when compared with their republican predecessors.

Next Monday the House will vote on the resolution reported by the committee on Rules naming the 22,23 and 24 of March for the consideration of the free coinage bill. If this resolution is adopted, as now seems probable notwithstanding the talk of a combination of republicans and antisilver democrats to defeat it the passage of the coinage bill may be set down as certain.

"How long," asked a democratic Senator, "would Congress consent to its daily sittings, of but a few hours each, in a building it knew to be unsafe and unhealthy? Not long, you may be sure. Look at the speed with which a resolution ordering an examination made by experts was rushed through a short time ago, upon a bare newspaper intimation that the sewage of the Capitol was in a bad condition. And yet, year after year it leaves three thousand men and women—the employes of the Government Printing Office—in a building that has been described by sanitary experts as a deathtrap, and by arthitects and builders as a "firetrap"? Now this isn't consistent. One class of Government employes are not entitled to a safe and healthy place to work in, any more than any other class." There's good sense in these remarks, even in this year of retrenchment and reform in public expenditures; and it would be "good politics" for the democrats to provide (what republicans have neglected to do) for a new Government Printing Office building; it would emphasize the claim always made by the democratic party, that it is the friend of the wage-worker.

The democratic leaders of the House have been unfortunate in having important legislative plans upset by illness during the present session. It had been all arranged that immediately after the reports upon the three tariff bills—free wool, free binding-twine and free cotton ties and bagging—were presented to the House, the free wool bill should be called up and the tariff debate opened with a set speech by Chairman Springer. The reports were made on Tuesday, but owing to the serious illness of Mr. Springer the opening of the debate had to be postponed until next Tuesday, when Mr. McMillin will lead off for the democrats.

Representative Mills is confined to his bed with a painful attack of erysipelas in his ankles, and his physician, says he will not be able to resume his duties for a week or two.

It is now estimated that the total amount of the regular appropriations that will be passed by the present House will be about $65,000,000 less than what was appropriated at the last session of the last Congress. That means one dollar less for each man, woman and child in the United States.

Speaker Crisp says he proposes to allow the members of the House to do their own voting, notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court in favor of Reed's "counted quorum." A thing may be legal and yet not right.

"One year from today", said Senator Hill this morning, "I shall attend the inauguration of a democratic President."

After an unusal amount of oratory had been poured out on the subject, the Senate voted on the Idaho Senatorial contest just as it was known from the first that it would vote—in favor of Dubois.

Representative Sayers has had printed, in the Congressional Record a table showing the unexpended appropriations for public building now in course of erection and the amounts required to complete them. A glance at this table will show why it is necessary to curtail appropriations for new buildings at this session.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

MEDINA—1855—Continued

The Canadian French settlement which was begun in 1853 at Medicine Lake by Antoine Le Count, extended itself across the Town of Plymouth and entered the northeasterly part of Medina in 1855. Those settlers in seeking homes sought lands possessed of sugar maple timber, and were conducted to such locatures by Antoine Lecount, who, being a native of Minnesota, born on the Red River near the northwest corner of the state, in 1822, and serving as an explorer and guide long before his settlement on Medicine Lake, became familliar with the country between the Red River and the Falls of St. Authony and beyond and was, therefore well qualified to conduct these settlers to spots in Medina abounding with maple sugar timber: the names and locations of those settlers being as follows Lange Hamel (father of Joseph and Wm Hamel) on line of Plymouth and Medina at Hamel P. O., settling there with his family; Prudent Fortin and family amongst whom Joseph Fortin; Peter Morin and family, Peter Billedeau and family, Peter Rouilliard and family, Joseph Corriveaux and Romain Pouilliot.

The following parties born in France settled in the same locality with their Canadian kinsmen at the same time, namely Antoine Laurent, M. D., a graduate of the Paris Medical School, his brother John Laurent, also Lewis Miller of French descent settled there at the same time. He afterwards organized the musical band known by his name in Minneapolis about 1860.

The following Irish settlers located in that part of Medina during the same year, namely: The Crowe brothers; James, Michael and Daniel, James Rooney on line of Plymouth and Medina with land in both towns, the Collins brothers: John, Cornelius, Dennis and Michael, and John Mayan settled on northern boundary of Medina: Maurice O'Herron on Medina Lake, also Thomas Kirkwood an American by birth settled on Section one.

John Hann (known as John Hannen) Girard and Nicholas Wolsfeld took claims in 1855 near John Wolsfeld. The Wolsfelds were brothers.

MINNETRISTA 1853-4-5.

The name of John and Joseph Merz having already been mentioned in connection with the first settlement of the southwesterly part of Minnetrista, the names of other settlers, mostly Germans, in that part of the town and the date of their first location there, will now be presented, namely; Michael Mergen was an 1853 settler and John Hirschberger, B. Logelin Frederick Barberich, Nicholas Dies and George Wilson were 1854 settlers and Elijah Kramer and Andrew Boll were 1855 settlers.

The following named parties were also amongst the 1855 settlers of the northeasterly part of Minnetrista namely: Capt N. H. Harrison, N. Henry and—Henry on Harrisons Bay; two or more parties by the name of Noble and a party by the name of Westlake on islands in Upper Minnetonka near the line of Excelsior and Minnetrista, William Buck, J. F. Buck, Edwin Gribble, Nathan H. Sanders located on north shore of Halstead's Bay instead of Harrison's Bay as mentioned in GAZETTE of the 5th inst. Capt Frank W. Halstead was an 1855 settler on the sothwesterly shore of Halstead's Bay, which portion of Lake Minnetonka was named for him.

ORONO 1854-5

The following incidents constitute a part of the early history of Orono and are associated with that already set forth.

The large island in Lower Minnetonka was first known as Meeker Island, so designated in honor to Judge Bradley B. Meeker, who in company with Col. John H. Stevens, Gov. Alexander Ramsey and others, had visited Lake Minnetonka some time previous to the settlement of the surrounding country.

In 1854 W. B. Morse located on the island and in due time obtained a title of the U. S. Government to the island; latterly it has been known as Morse's or Big Island.

James Holmes located on the easterly portion and end of the peninsula on which Hotel Lafayette is now located. The point of the peninsula projecting southware toward Big Island was part of Holmes claim once and was known for many years as Holme's Point.

In the spring of 1855, William F. Russell (see Orono) on returning to Minnesota from a visit to his native home in New York, brought with him his father Caleb Russel and his two brothers Harvey Y. (see Minnetrista) and Alexander Russel. Caleb Russel, through having been a soldier of the war of 1812, had received a military land warrant of the U. S. Government, of which he was still possessed on his arival in Minnesota and which he located on land on the northerly shore of the West Arm of Lake Minnetonka near location made by his son Harvey Y. Russell, in Minnetrista, being the same land which now constitutes a portion of the plat of Saga Hill, and Alexander Russell settled on the same Lake Shore on land adjoinind claims of Caleb and Harvey Y. Russell.

In April 1855 a road was surveyed from Excelsior across Hill's narrows to Greenwood which road ran on and near the Indian trail over which the pioneers of the village of Greenwood travelled when they commenced the latter village.

During the lecture he sung several very nice songs well suited for the occasion.

Mr. Davis has made an warm friends in Annandale, and we hope to have him with us again to lecture in the near future.

A MAGAZINE writer has lately demonstrated by an elaborate array of facts and figures that it is impossible for a locomotive to pull a passenger train at a faster rate than about seventy miles an hour. THE total consumption of sugar in the United States last year was 1,885,994 tons, of which 234,970 tons were domestic and 31,320 of home manufacture from foreign molasses. This was an increase of 23.86 per cent. over the 1,522,731 tons consumed in 1890, but the gain was altogether in sugar produced abroad. The consumption per capita was 67.46 pounds last year, against 54.56 pounds in 1890. Allowing 5 per cent. as the normal annual increase in consumption, there is nearly 19 per cent. to be accounted for as a result of the extremely low prices last year, combined with a very steady market.

LATER.

The Silver Bill.

WASHINGTON, March 7.—The free coinage issue will not down. This was clearly demonstrated by today's afternoon session of the house, and the gentlemen in both parties who have been hoping that the silver question might be postponed until after the general elections are tonight convinced that the issue is one which must be met and disposed of by the house before the date of the national conventions. The free coinage men in both parties are, of course, highly elated at their triumph.

When the speaker called the house to order at noon he was confronted with a large array of empty seats. Before the reading of the journal Mr. Catchings, of Mississippi, called up the silver resolution, and the clerk proceeded to read it, and upon its adoption Mr. Catchings demanded the previous question. Mr. Tracey, of New York, called attention to the fact that the journal had not been read. The speaker declared it was in order for the gentleman from Mississippi to call up the resolution.

The entire afternoon was spent in discussion of rules and the resolution fixing March 22d as the date which the Bland bill for free coinage shall be considered. At the close of debate the yeas and nays were ordered and resulted in the adoption of the resolution, yeas 190, nays 84.

THE BEHRING SEA CASE.

Salisbury's Refusal to Renew the Modus Vivendi Places the Matter in a Serious Position.

WASHINGTON, March 7.—The Behring sea situation still continues to be the chief topic of gossip. The return of the president seems to be accepted as an indication that a firm stand will be maintained. The matter is generally regarded as very serious and no predictions are made as to the outcome.

The action of Lord Salisbury in refusing to renew the modus vivendi while at the same time approving the treaty of arbitration, is considered in the nature of a direct insult, and his suggestion that a closed zone be observed around the Pribyloff islands is regarded as a mere quibble. It is generally regarded that to submit the whole matter to arbitration and leave the sea entirely open to fishers for a whole season would be absurd on the face of it, inasmuch as by the time the question came to be settled there would be literally nothing left to arbitrate, for the reason that there would be no seals extant. An open season, as proposed, it is thought would mean the utter annihilation of the species.

There need be no fear that the policy followed will be lacking in vigor or will fail to uphold American rights. Intimations have been received that Lord Salisbury did not fully estimate the irritation his refusal to renew the modus vivendi would cause. It has been hinted that Minister Lincoln has received information in the nature of an "explanation" of just what the British foreign office meant by the suggestion of a 30-mile limit around the Pribyloff islands.

The Canadians who have fostered the seal-poaching industry are plainly hopeful that they will get another season's unrestricted poaching. In this they are badly mistaken. Unless the modus vivendi is renewed by the British government the arbitration treaty will not be ratified by the senate. The treaty may be sent in by the president with a recommendation for an amendment requiring the renewal of the modus vivendi. If Great Britain is not willing to consent to this, then the United States will undertake the protection of the seals alone and will act on the assumption that its jurisdiction is complete.

The navy department had almost concluded that the Mohican, in connection with the revenue cutters Corwin, Rush and Bear would be sufficient for this year's police duty, but it is now feared that something more than police duty will be necessary. Naval officers have been consulting together a good deal as to what will be expected of the navy in the light of Lord Salisbury's new attitude. The naval officials fully expect instructions that will necessitate the presence of nearly all of the Pacific fleet in the Behring sea.

BLOODY FIGHT IN KENTUCKY

Negroes Attack a Party of White Men and Four of the Former Are Dead.

EDMONTON, Ky., March 7.—News has just been received of a bloody fight which took place at Clark's cross roads, 5 miles east of this place, between a party of twelve wagoners (white) on one side and eleven negro farm hands on the other, in which four of the negroes were killed and three or four wounded and two of the wagoners seriously hurt. One of the wagoners, while passing along the road, struck a negro with his whip and cursed him. The negro gathered ten of his friends together and started for a distillery where the wagoners had a habit of stopping. When they arrived at the distillery all of the wagoners were inside of the house purchasing whisky, except two. These the negroes set upon with rocks and clubs and would have made short work of them but for the timely appearance of the ten others, who sprang among them and in a short time shot and killed four and wounded three or four others, two of whom, it is said, cannot recover.

EDWARDS PIERREPONT DEAD.

Grant's Attorney General Expires at His Home in New York—His Career.

NEW YORK, March 7.—Edwards Pierrepont died at 6:30 o'clock Saturday morning at his home, 105 Fifth avenue, after an illness of four days. During the last two years and a half he has been an invalid and had suffered considerably during that time from nervous prostration.

[Edwards Pierrepont was born in North Haven, Conn., March 4, 1814. He entered Yale college and was graduated with the class of 1837 with high honor. Immediately after graduation he began to practice law at Columbus, O., with P. C. Wilcox where he continued until 1846, when he came to New York. Upon the death of Chief Justice G. Oakley he was elected a judge of the superior court. He was active in organizing the union defense committee, among the other members of which were John A. Dix, Hamilton Fish, A. T. Stewart and many other prominent citizens. He was appointed United States minister to Russia in 1873, but declined the honor, and in April, 1875, he was appointed attorney general of the United States and remained in Gen. Grant's cabinet until May, 1876, when he was appointed United States minister to England.]

Part of a $200,000,000 Estate.

JANESVILLE, Wis., March 7.—Mrs. W. H. Conklin has received good news from Europe. When her great-grandfather died in France he left an estate now worth $200,000,000. There are forty heirs to this and attorneys were sent abroad several years ago to work upon the case. Mrs. Conklin, who is now in Rockford, has just received word from the lawyers that she will soon get $5,000,000. Her husband is an expressman.

A Mount Pleasant Financier Departs in a Very Mysterious Manner.

MOUNT PLEASANT, Pa., March 7.—Hugo Kail, president and owner of the Slavinsky bank and general steamship agent, is missing. The Slavs and Huns of this region have been depositing their savings with him, and he is said to have $8,000 of their money in his possession. When the announcement was made that Kail was not in town a crowd of angry foreigners surrounded the bank and threatened to break down the door. They were only prevented from carrying out their threats by the police.

Michigan Schools and the Fair.

JACKSON, Mich., March 7.—On February 22, Washington's birthday, the school children throughout the state were asked to contribute one cent apiece, teachers and school officers ten cents and principals fifty cents, in order to aid Michigan's educational exhibition at the World's Columbian exposition. The projectors of the scheme report the receipt of over $10,000 up to date, with a number of localities yet to hear from. This amount is several thousand dollars in excess of what was expected or asked for.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

Betrayed by a Relative.

A mother, but no wife, betrayed by a relative, deserted by her kindred, no home and poverty-stricken. Such is the story of pretty little Jessie Cossback, aged 16 years. She arrived in Minneapolis six months ago, and in a short time gave birth to a son at the northwestern hospital. Her father, who lives in the city, cast her off. The humane society found her a good home with Mr. and Mrs. Francis Hoffman. The little woman maintains that her uncle is the father of the child and that he forced her to succumb to his wishes by threats.

Read His Own Obituary Often.

Rev. Elijah W. Merrill died recently in Minneapolis. When little more than an infant it was supposed that he had died and he was laid out for burial. Before the funeral signs of life were discovered and he was revived. A few years ago he was reported as drowned while crossing the Mississippi and several memorial sermons were preached, including one at Albion college, Michigan, where he had been a professor. Mr. Merrill survived to read reports of these.

Lost $200,000 in the Mail.

Two hundred thousand dollars' worth of mortgages and notes have been lost in the mails between Minneapolis and Superior. The package containing the valuable documents was shipped from Minneapolis January 14, though the discovery of the loss was only made the other day. The papers were shipped from the office of W. W. Townsend, a wealthy Minneapolis capitalist, and he is confident that the package was put in the Minneapolis post office.

Stabbed by His Wife.

Edmund Welch, manager of the Parlor variety theater at Duluth, was in St. Mary's hospital with a hole 2½inches deep in his back. His wife, Kitty Welch, stabbed him. The knife went in diagonally, the point of it striking the vertebrae. He will recover. Kitty and Edmund Welch are well-known characters in variety acting and have appeared hundreds of nights in boxing contests.

A Sudden Message.

Especially sad was the sudden death at his home of William Massolt, one of the oldest and best known German residents of Minneapolis. There was a little party of friends at the house in the evening and a very enjoyable time was spent by all concerned until the breaking up time came. A few minutes later, upon retiring, Mr. Massolt was attacked by heart failure and expired in a few minutes.

Winter Wheat a Failure.

February reports from southern Minnesota indicate that the winter wheat crop will be almost a total failure. Many fields appear brown and dead, owing to the light snow and constant violent changes in temperature. At least 50 per cent. of the grain from Winona county westward will be plowed up and spring wheat sown.

Large Money Offered for Seats.

Many applicants for seats in the national republican convention at Minneapolis are making large money offers for the privilege of admittance. The local executive committee is largely in favor of making the price for seats $50, but that is a matter that will be arranged by the national committee.

Death of a Pioneer.

Hon. Horace E. Barron, a pioneer and one of the most prominent men of Faribault, and well-known throughout the northwest, died suddenly of heart failure, aged 66 years. He had been steward of the state school for the deaf, the blind and the feeble minded in Faribault for twelve years.

—Cardinal Manning is said to have been so careless in his dress as to be positively shabby in appearance at times. —There is a scar on Gov. Hill's neck that will recall to him to his dying day the narrow escape he had from assassination when he was a young lawyer but recently admitted to the bar. He was counsel for a woman named Minier, who had brought suit against her husband to replevin some furniture, and at the announcement of the verdict the enraged defendant drew his pocket-knife and plunged the blade into the young attorney's neck. The knife just missed the jugular vein, and the resulting wound, though painful, was not serious.

—Our beautiful national hymn, America, was written by Rev. Samuel F. Smith in 1832, while he was a student at Andover, without any idea that it would ever become famous. It was first sung in public at a children's celebration in Park Street church, Boston, July, 4, 1832. Its popularity was assured from that time. Dr. Smith, who was eighty-three years old the 21st of last October, lives in a pleasant home at Newton, Mass., whose piazzas and bay windows look toward the sun. It will be remembered that Dr. Holmes, at the annual reunion of the class of 1829 held in 1859, wrote thus of Dr. Smith:

And there's a nice youngster of excellent pith,
Fate tried to conceal him by naming him Smith,
But he shouted a song for the brave and the free,
Just read on his medal: "My Country, of Thee."

How to Mend Lace.

The mending of lace is an art of itself, and many professional menders, who are usually French or German, earn handsome livings working at this dainty task. A knowledge of lace stitchery is necessary in mending handsome lace. If an ordinary piece tears mend it with lace thread, which comes in small soft balls at five to ten cents, imitating the groundwork mesh to the best of your ability. Before taking a stitch baste the lace on a piece of embroidery, leather or stiff paper, otherwise it will be drawn out of shape and distorted by puckers. In pulling out the basting threads after darning a tear, be careful to clip the threads into short lengths.—Ladies' Home Journal.

A HOUSEKEEPER'S DREAM.

A housekeeper sat in her easy chair
At the close of a sweet spring day;
The children played in the garden fair,
The kettle was humming a cheerful air,
But her face was grave, with its lines of care,
And her thoughts were far away.

It was Monday, and there were rows on rows—
Out under the orchard trees—
Of the whitest, and sweetest, and cleanest of clothes;
There were tiny aprons, with ruffles and bows;
And stockings, with never a hole in the toes;
And dresses, and wrappers of ease.

"I must get them in, for it looks like rain,"
She said, with a weary sigh,
As she glanced again thro' the window pane,
At the stable roof and the weather vane,
At a purple cloud that lay like a stain
Low down on the western sky.

Said she: "It was wash, and iron, and cook,
Till the livelong week is through.
Work peeps from every corner and nook,
I seldom have time to read a book,
I half our papers I never look,
There is always so much to do.

"Miss Ayer goes riding about the town,
As if she had days to let;
Miss Gray"—and her brows were bent to a frown,
While the book she held fell noisily down—
"Has time to visit, or make a gown—
She has my last pattern yet."

The kettle kept on its drowsy song,
And the lady closed her eyes;
She thought how the days were growing long;
How all of the children were well and strong;
How hard it was to keep them from wrong—
How baby was growing wise.

The chair was easy, she slept at last,
The kitchen was lost to view;
She dreamed that her toil and care were past—
She reigned in a palace strange and vast;
Her lot with the great of the land was cast;
She had nothing whatever to do.

O joy untold! but she looked about
And listened for little feet;
How strange it seemed they should all be out,
So far away that no song or shout
Did gladden her ear, within or without.
Were they far in the lane or the street?

Then she thought, in her dream, they all had flown—
Because of the work they made—
To some other sphere, till they should be grown,
While she was left in her palace alone,
With none who had need of her aid.

"At least my husband is left to me still,"
Said the mother, sad and low;
"He always did praise my care and skill;
No other my place, to him, can fill.
I will watch and wait for him until—
He will come at eve, I know."

And then she remembered that days before
He had gone with a merry band
Of comrades he had not known of yore,
(How well he looked in the suit he wore)
In a famous yacht, to some far-off shore,
By the southern breezes fanned.

So she sat and sighed through the weary day,
And far in the evening's gloom;
Her servants came and were sent away—
She sang and played—'twas the saddest lay
She had ever sung, and it seemed to stay
And float through the lonely room.

"Ah! better," she said, "was a life of care,
With somebody else to please,
Than a life in this home, so grand and fair,
Which neither my husband nor children share—
O better by far to do and to bear,
Than an idle life of ease!"

A laugh, and a shout! and the lady's dream
Was brought to a sudden close;
The children were here—what a noisy team!
The baby was driving, she caught a gleam
Of the setting sun, as it came like a stream
Through the western gates of gold.

No supper! the water was bubbling o'er
And the fire was nearly spent,
But the woman's face no longer wore
The weary look of an hour before—
She had wiser grown through the mystic lore
Of a dream that came and went.

IN THE FLUE.

Harry Baker's Dangerous Experience in a Smelting Furnace.

BY A SMALL stream stand the smelting works of the Denby Mining and Smelting Company. An unusual thing about these works is that one sees neither smoke nor smoke stacks above the flaming furnaces. But up on the hill, a quarter of a mile away, a huge iron chimney rises seventy-five feet above the ground; and to this chimney, through an underground passage, is conducted the smoke from the lead furnaces.

There is a good reason for this method of conducting the smoke away. If the smoke from a lead furnace is carried directly upwards to the air it settles rapidly to the ground, leaving a grayish sediment where it touches. More than three-quarters of this sediment is pure lead, which ordinarily goes to waste.

After much experiment to save the waste, the Denby company hit upon the plan of conducting the smoke from the furnaces through an underground passage. In this way the lead which had escaped in the smoke by evaporation was given time to cool and to be condensed before passing through the chimney.

The tunnel was near the surface of the ground, and was lined on the inside with a thick wall of brick. Near the furnaces an iron door opened into the tunnel, through which the lead was removed.

A few years ago the Denby company had among its employes a boy named Harry Baker, a stout young fellow, sixteen years old. He did odd jobs about the works, and assisted wherever he was needed.

One day Harry was sent to help the men who were removing the lead from the tunnel. Of course the smelting works had to be shut down during the time set apart for this work; and for this reason, and in order that the furnaces might be started up again as quickly as possible, the work was done hastily.

It was late in the afternoon when the job was finished. There was nothing more for him to do that day, and Harry was sent home. Just as he came into the village he met Peters, the foreman of the gang of men who had taken the lead out of the tunnel.

"Hullo, Harry," said Peters, "you are just the fellow I want to see. There was a shovel left in the tunnel where we were at work this afternoon. I wish you would go down and bring it out. I just happened to think of it, and if you will do the errand for me it will save me quite a walk. You can leave the shovel in the tool-room."

"All right," said Harry. He walked briskly back to the smelting works, and found the place deserted by all save the bookkeeper, who was preparing to go home.

"Please give me the key to the tunnel-door," said Harry. "We left a shovel where we were at work this afternoon, and Mr. Peters has sent me to fetch it out."

"The superintendent has the key," said the bookkeeper, "and he's gone away."

"I think there is a key hanging up in the office," said Harry. "Anyway, Mr. Peters left one there this evening."

"So there is," said the bookkeeper, after looking. "You can keep it till morning, or give it to Peters."

Harry procured a lamp from the tool-room, lighted it, unlocked the padlock on the outside of the iron door, put the key in his pocket, and entered the dark tunnel. Before he had entered, the bookkeeper had gone away.

He found that the shovel had been left at the farther end of the passage, and it was a quarter of an hour before he could get it and return to the entrance.

When he returned to the door, he found, to his horror, that it had been closed and locked. He shouted and beat upon the door, but no answer came. Then he stood in silence, hardly knowing what to do.

Who had shut the door? As he pondered upon it he came to the conclusion that the superintendent had not left the works when the bookkeeper supposed; that he had been in some other part of the buildings, and, returning to the neighborhood of the tunnel door, had found it open. Then, supposing that the workmen had forgotten to close it, the superintendent had shut and locked it, without suspecting that any one was within.

Harry pounded upon the door again, hoping that the superintendent was not far away. But no response came. No one was within hearing. His key was useless, for the door could only be opened from the outside.

He sat down and pondered again. What would happen? He knew that within a short time after the clearing of the tunnel the furnaces were "fired up" again; and, as soon as the fires were started, he would be suffocated by the smoke and gases, and would die a dreadful death.

The thought filled him with alarm. Again and again he beat upon the door with the shovel, but no one came to his assistance. Could he climb down through one of the furnaces and escape that way before the fires were lighted?

No; he knew well enough that the way toward the furnaces was barred by a huge iron grate that extended across the tunnel. Nevertheless, he rushed to the gratings as if hoping that by some accident there might be a passage way.

The gratings were impassable, of course! He knelt upon them, his lighted lamp in his hand, peering down into the darkness below, and wondering if he could make the firemen hear through the flues by shouting. He called again and again. It was quite useless; the distance was too great, and the flues did not readily convey the sound.

As he knelt there he fancied that he smelled smoke. Could it be from his lamp? Certainly not. It was the smell of burning wood, which now came distinctly to his nostrils. The fires were already being lighted.

Harry turned and walked up the tunnel. It was useless to hurry. He was in a trap and must be suffocated in a few minutes.

As he walked along, he suddenly remembered that within the chimney there was an iron ladder, running to the top, which had been placed there by the builders to afford a footing for the men who cleaned out the chimney. Why could he not climb the ladder and reach the outside in that way? It was a long distance to climb, but it was his only way out.

He ran now as fast as he could. The smell of the smoke grew stronger and stronger. He knew that if the smoke did not come too fast, he could climb to the top of the ladder; but how was he to get down? Never mind about that now, he thought; he would rather be dashed to pieces on the ground below the chimney, than suffocated in this horrible tunnel. Besides, he could call for help if he once reached the top of the chimney.

Soon he gained the foot of the ladder, and placing the lamp in his hat began the ascent. Already the white smoke was beginning to fill the chimney. He must climb for his life. The clouds of smoke grew thicker and thicker about him as he made his way desperately up the slender ladder. With every step his breathing became more difficult. Could he hold out till he reached the top?

Half stifled, with a sickening, dizzy feeling stealing over him, he at last reached the top of the chimney and drew himself up upon its rim. Bending quickly over the side, he managed to get a breath of fresh air. That revived him. He glanced hastily about. Darkness was fast settling over the hill, but there was still light enough to show him that no one was in sight.

Far below in the valley he saw the red lights gleaming from the open doors of the smelting works, and now and then caught the dark forms of the workmen, but he knew they were beyond the sound of his voice. It was almost useless to expect help.

Looking downwards, he saw what might be a means of escape. Several feet below him were the large stay-wires that held the great chimney in place. If he could get down to these wires he might slip to the ground. But how could he be certain that if he dropped he could catch one of the wires? If he missed it he would go to the ground, seventy-five feet be ow, and be dashed to pieces.

It would be better to remain perched upon the edge of the chimney and try to keep his head out of the volume of smoke until help should come. But the smoke, growing denser every moment, swirled about the top of the chimney, now and then completely enveloping him.

He knew that now the smoke was only that which came from the burning wood, but the charges of ore would soon be placed in the furnaces, and then the poisonous gas which would rise must render his situation ten times more perilous.

He looked down once more in the hope of seeing some one whom he might summon to his assistance. He saw only the bare waste of the desolate hill. But, glancing down into the little valley towards the town, he presently discerned the forms of two men walking in the direction of the furnaces. If they should look up they must have him in view. He shouted to them, with all the strength he could command, again and again. But the men continued their course down the valley.

Harry was a brave boy, but his heart sank as he realized that his last chance of escape was passing. Suddenly he remembered the lamp which he had placed in his hat. Quickly taking it in his hand, he began to wave it in a circle about his head. Several times he repeated this, shouting at the top of his voice as he did so.

Presently he saw one of the men stop. He seemed to be looking in the direction of the chimney. Then his companion followed his example, and a moment later Harry saw them both hurrying up the hill.

He took new courage from their coming, though he saw no way in which they could help him. It was all he could do now to keep his face out of the huge clouds of smoke that were pouring out of the chimney and curling about him; but, leaning downward as far as possible, he called to the men to hurry to his assistance. In a few moments they were within speaking distance.

"Quick!" shouted Harry. "Run for ladders and ropes! I can't hold on here much longer!"

"How did you get up there?" one of them called.

"Never mind—I tell you I'll be dead soon if you don't help me!" Harry shouted.

The men turned about and ran in the direction of the town. It was now almost dark. They were soon lost to sight in the shadows of the valley. It seemed an age to Harry, though it could not have been more than ten minutes, before he caught sight of half a dozen lanterns moving swiftly across the valley, followed by scores of dark forms. Two minutes later an excited crowd of men came running up the slope, and were soon gathered about the base of the chimney gazing helplessly upward.

"Take courage and hold fast!" shouted one of the men. "The ladders will be here in a few minutes to help you down."

"I can't hold on much longer," answered Harry, leaning far over the chimney, while the smoke whirled about him. "I can breathe here but a few minutes more. It's suffocating me!"

The people below hurried helplessly back and forth. Some of them attached a stone to a rope, and tried vainly to throw it to the top of the chimney.

Meantime a hot, sickening blast of gas came up, from which Harry recoiled desperately. Men had gone to the works to drag the fire from the furnaces, but the tunnel and flues were now charged with gas. It was but an affair of minutes before Harry must be asphyxiated and lose his grasp.

The firemen rushed up to the base of the chimney and ran their ladders aloft. But the highest point they could reach was thirty feet below the top.

A groan of disappointment went up from the crowd. Harry realized that now but one thing remained to be done, and that must be done instantly.

SWINGING LIKE A PENDULUM.

He could not be reached; he must drop to the stay wires.

The excited crowd below, looking upward, saw him first fling his hat and lantern clear of the crowd and then swing himself down the edge of the chimney. Then cries of horror went up as he was seen to leap downward into space.

Not one in the crowd but thought he would be dashed to pieces on the ground. But descending swiftly, he struck the stay-wire. The next moment he had caught it in his hands and for an instant hung suspended, swinging like a pendulum beneath.

Then he threw his legs over the wires, slid slowly to the ground, and fell faint'ng in the arms of one of the men who had rushed forward to assist him.—Yankee Blade.

This Donkey Had Weak Lungs.

An eccentric lady named Chamberlain died recently near Birmingham, Eng. She had considerable means and kept herself surrounded with animals of all sorts. For this purpose she bought two cottages, one of which she occupied herself and the other she gave up to her pets. She conceived an attachment for a donkey belonging to a neighbor and which browsed in an adjoining field. The donkey's lungs became affected, and she invited him over to her field and attended to him. The owner of the donkey then said: "If you are so fond of the donkey I will make you a present of it." She accepted the donkey, which became so attached to her as to follow her about. A favorite dog belonging to the husband having survived him, was, in accordance with his previous directions, buried in his grave. When the widow died there was some disturbance and difficulties arose, the result being that the dog was removed, and, after her burial, replaced in the grave.—Chicago Post.

ANOTHER USE FOR SOAP.

It May Be Used as an Adjunct to the Sewing Machine.

"I had an amusing experience the other day," said a middle-aged lady to a visitor, as they sat indulging in a bit of gossip. "A very amusing experience, and one which aptly illustrates the smartness of young and inexperienced human nature. I presume you remember, years ago, before sewing-machines were as perfect as they are now, that with many machines there came, among other fittings, a cake of soap about one inch wide by an inch and a half long. In those days, most of the cotton cloth was full of dressing; indeed, it is but a few years since soft finished cottons came into general use. Well, as I said before, these cakes of soap were often furnished with sewing-machines. They were used to rub over the seams of these starched goods when there was any extra thickness to stitch through. If you never tried it, you would scarcely believe the difference it makes, either for hand or machine sewing, if the goods are the least bit stiff. I have always made a practice of soaping the seams of goods that had any suggestion of dressing in them. I had a number of cakes of this soap, and they lasted me for years.

"Not long since I had some white lawn to make up, and, as it was very full of dressing, I was about to use the soap according to my custom, but found that there was none left. The next time that I was down town, I stepped into the salesroom of the company whose machine I have been in the habit of using. The retail department happened for the moment to be in charge of a youth who, from all appearances, had for the first time in his life assumed the responsibility of such a position. I asked if they had any such cakes of soap, and you would have been amused at the impertinent airs that youngster put on. He couldn't understand what use the operator of a sewing machine could have for soap. In sympathy for his ignorance, I explained to him the use of the article, making some remarks on its convenience, and the greater ease of sewing dressed fabrics and the less danger of breaking needles. With a supercilious smile and an air of superiority which was absolutely overwhelming, he informed me of course he didn't know what cheap machines might require, but theirs needed no such assistance, and equally, of course, they kept nothing of the sort.

"There may be among the rising generation many persons who have not learned the advantage of this old custom. To those it might be well to say that a bit of well-dried Castile soap kept in the sewing-machine drawer, and used upon thick seams or dressed fabrics, would not only save many a needle, but is almost a certain preventive of cutting the cloth. It softens the fibers of the fabric, and allows the needle to pass through much more easily and smoothly. Indeed, it is as useful as an emery cushion, and will be found of great advantage either for the women who occasionally sew a seam or for those who earn their livelihood by the use of the sewing-machine. One might moralize a little on the marvelous smartness of the average youth, and wonder if the time will ever again come when boys will be boys, and not—at least in their own opinion—miniature encyclopedias of universal knowledge."—N. Y. Ledger.

A CAR TRACK FEUD.

Verbal Photograph of an Everyday Occurrence.

Two heavily laden carts approach each other on the same track.

As the space between the two diminished each driver began making motions to the other to get off the track, until finally the heads of the two horses met.

"Why don't you turn off an' let me by?" shouted one.

"You are the one to turn off," yelled the other. "I have the right of way."

"Right ——, said the first, "my load is twict as heavy as your'n."

"Come off! Your old break-down cart wouldn't hold half as much as mine."

"Wouldn't, eh? Why, that nag of yours couldn't begin to pull a decent load."

"You're a liar!"

"You're a' nother!"

"Git out of my way or I'll smash your rotten team in bits."

"Move off that track or I'll drive my team all over your old traveling hospital."

"Shut up, or I'll——"

"Ah! You'll——"

"Here! Here! Youse fellers git offen that track an' let this car by" shouted one of the finest. "Go on now, or I'll run yez both in."

The two drivers pulled off the track, all the time gazing fiercely at each other and as the car passed, one yelled:

"If it hadn't bin fer that car I'd run all over your nag an' breakdown!"

"If the car hadn't cum I'd smashed your old box of bones up an'——

"Bah!"

"Baw!"

"Rats!"

"Chestnuts!"

"Git up, Sam!"

"Gee, Bill!"—Philadelphia Press

A Bundle of Wires.

Nervous people are often likened to a bundle of wires so sensitive are they to the least outside vibration. Go South via the Monon Route.

The equipment of this line is not surpassed by any other. Its road-bed and bridges have been thoroughly rebuilt, thus assuring passengers speed, safety and comfort. Four fast trains leave Chicago daily, making close connection at Louisville and Cincinnati with the L. & N. R. R., and Queen & Crescent Route for Jacksonville, New Orleans and the winter resorts of the South.

The day trains are made up of day coaches, parlor and dining-cars, vestibuled from end to end. The night trains consist of Pullman's perfected vestibuled coaches, sleepers and compartment cars, with an extra sleeper for Indianapolis passengers, lighted by electricity and heated by steam.

In addition to the usual Pullman Sleeper the fast night trains between Chicago and Cincinnati have compartment sleeping cars, just built for this line. This feature is particularly "the thing" for families, bridal couples or parties traveling together. The "Monon" is also the only road that serves meals in a regular dining car, between Chicago and Cincinnati. On the whole it is the most pleasant, comfortable and above all the most scenic route from Chicago to the Gulf or Atlantic coast.

DELANO DIARY.

—His Honor, Mayor Coolen, threatens to buy a stove pipe hat.

—Waverly has two applications to sell liqnor published in this weeks GAZETTE.

—Dell and Mable Young and Fred Lindsley visited Minneapolis on Saturday evening.

—The Bauman girls have opened up their dressmaker shop again after several weeks vacation.

—See the advertisment for sealed bids for building the M E. church at Armstrong, in another column.

—See our election reports of villages and towns in another column as complete as we could get them to date.

—The time table on the Great Northern has been changed. The afternoon train east now goes an hour later at 5:40 P. M.

—Look out for the Financial Statement of the Town of Franklin next week. It was brought in too late for publication this week.

—We are informed that the student who was suspended from school last week has been reinstated. Without the collection having been made.

—A. L. Cooley, well known throughout the county as a man of more than ordinary attainments was found dead in a barn at Buffalo, on Saturday last.

—At the Democratic village caucus held on Saturday evening the following committee for the ensuing year was appointed. John Coolen, Albert Eppel and J. C. Hitz.

—Persons sending in items should affix their signatures, in order for us to know who they are and be sure of the truthfulness of their items if they desire to have them escape the waste basket.

—When our politicians and others visit the county seat, in future, they will have to take their bottles along or go dry till they get home. Perhaps this will have a tendency to purify politics in our county.

—Dr. Shrader took passage via shank's ponies to Rockford Station where he boarded the Soo road for Buffalo on Wednesday. He stood the blizzard all right except one cheek got frozen. Dr. says he is out of politics.

—The Eagle as is her wont comes up as fiercely as ever to the attack of things she cannot run. For instance the Great Northern Railway which has one of the smoothest and strongest tracks in the state seems to be inefficient for the accommodation of the kingly bird.

—On Saturday evening Jesse Brandon arrived home from Minneapolis with the Delano Cornet's Band Box. It is shined up in style, upholstered and ready for occupancy by the Band. When it appears on the streets loaded with the sweet strain's it is supposed that music will fill the air for a short season at least.

—The train going west, over the Great Northern, at 9:41, a. m., on Thursday run into snow drifts between here and Montrose and after trying to get through until about 2 p. m., returned to this place where they sidetracked until about 5 p m. when a snow plow followed by the evening passenger train arrived. The road having been cleared allowed the delayed train to pass on.

—The consensus of opinion appears to be that Delano has got a good set of officers for the ensuing year. That no money is likely to be thrown away. That a surveyor to establish a grade for streets and sidewalks, so that those putting up new buildings will know where they should stand and lay their sidewalks where they should be is likely, in the near future, to be procured, and many other needed immovements to be made.

Personals.

L. M. Maxfield and John Brasle visited St. Cloud this week.

The Getiles in this part of Christendom are talking up reform in a political way. Think it about time some of the old mudsills should be regenerated and born a new or there places filled by men who believe in reform and progression not postmortem progression but in the present tense, here and now. Who are we to look to in this age of the world if not through statesmen philosophers and the clergy for reform movements? Hope our nation may soon experience a reform in many ways but our desire is that it many not come by pestilence famine or by sword but by purity of the ballot.

Town meeting was held at 3 p. m., not a large turnout. A little disorderly but very consistent as a whole.

World's Fair Notes.

The total amount paid out up to February 1, by Treasurer Seeberger, for construction and other expenses of the Exposition was $3,572,891.

The Board of Trade of Columbia, S. C., has undertaken to see that an exhibit worthy of that State is made at the Exposition.

The preperation of the educational exhibits from South Dakota and New Mexico has been entrusted to the women members of the respective State Boards.

The Manufacturers' Club of Philadelphia desires to erect a building in the Exposition grounds, constructed entirely of material made by members of the club, with intent that it be headquarters for manufacturers, not only of Philadelphia, but of the entire country.

A number of influential Norwegians, residing in Chicago, have formed an association with the purpose of having a Norwegian artist paint a large picture representing Lief Erickson starting on his voyage of discovery of America, and also of erecting in Chicago a monument to the noted Norwegian discoverer. It is the intention to exhibit the painting in the Art Gallery of the Exposition and to erect the monument in one of the Chicago parks.

Chief Samuels, of the Horticultural Department, has returned from a trip to Florida and Cuba, where he stimulated interest in the Exposition and secured the promise of many fine palms and other tropical plants, to be exhibited in his department.

Invitations to foreign nations to send representatives to the exercises dedicatory of the Exposition buildings, next October, have been issued by the Committee on Ceremonies, and have been forwarded to their destinations by Secretary of State, Blaine.

Michigan will expend $12,000 to $15,000 on its forestry exhibit, and $4,000 to $5,000 on its display of fruits.

LITTLE POTUS.

Born—Lived—Died in the Criminal Classes.

BY JULIA MCNAIR WRIGHT.

IN THREE PARTS.

PART II.

NURSED IN THE CRIMINAL CLASSES.

"Hello!" said Potus, staggering down the steps. He looked, rubbed his eyes, comprehended.

"There's one too many here. I'm off," he said.

"Stop!" shouted Mrs. Chance. What shall I do with this child?"

"I don't care what you do with it," cried Potus and was off.

Next morning Mrs. Chance handed the babe to its mother.

"I wish the brat was dead," said Polly. "What am I to do with it? I'm hungry—the fire's out."

She began to cry.

Mrs Chance went to the poormaster.

"Come, now," said the poormaster, "don't trouble me, my good soul. In a few days the woman will be about and will care for the child somehow. There's a dollar. Get her what is needed. I'm busy."

Mrs. Chance invested the dollar as judiciously as possible, but one hundred cents will not go far in desitution of all things, and in four days she returned to the poormaster.

"A big hearty woman, she has no right to go to the almshouse," he cried. "Why doesn't she work and take care of herself?"

"She knows no kind of work," said Mrs. Chance. "She has no character, no stock in trade."

"Every penny I give her will be spent in drink."

"No doubt; but if she gets drunk she may be arrested, and, once in prison, she will be provided for," said Mrs. Chance.

"So I'm to give her a rope to hang herself, eh?"

"The child's father should take care of it," said Mrs. Chance.

The poormaster caught at that straw.

"Certainly, certainly he should. Now, Mrs. Chance, you are a woman of sense. You know these people. Go and have Potus arrested and charged before the magistrate with neglecting his family."

The next day Potus III was standing before Justice.

"Who says it's my child?" said Potus; leering about the court.

"I do!" shrieked Mrs. Chance.

"Prove it," said Potus; Prove it. How are you goin' to d that, eh?"

"At least," said the legal mind, "the mother is your wife, and so in law the child is your child."

"Who says she's my wife?" demanded Potus.

"I do!" cried Mrs. Chance frantically.

"Prove it!" said Potus, holding by the bar and swaying about. "Where's the c'tificate! Who sey us mar'ed.

"At least," said justice, "you have lived with her as your wife, and here is her child. You owe them support. You can support th-m—"

"Prove it!" howled Potus, "Prove it! Who says I can s'port 'em? Do I look like a bloated millionaire? Have I a trade?

He held out his shaking hand; he looked at his rags, at his toes sticking from a boot and a shoe—both lefts.

"What will I sport em on, Jedge?"

"To the island for a month!" cried indignant Justice.

"What for?" whined Potus, "I a'int been doin' nothin'."

"Take him off!" said the Judge. "A month will give him time to get washed, shaved, sober. Take him away.

Potus was carried out but, loudly remonstrant, threatening to break every bone in everyone's body, and insisting on being given the hearts of his persecuters as an item in his diet.

Bereft of hope of succor from the child's natural protectors, Mrs. Chance turned to private charity. She brought Dorcas to the cellar of Polly Potus. The woman shocked Mrs. Dorcas, but the child moved her pity.

"This cellar is not fit for a human being to stay in for one hour," said Mrs. Dorcas.

"If you gave her a Fifth Avenue house she would make it as nearly like this as she could in a short time," said Chance.

"I hope you will try to reform for her child's sake," said Mrs. Dorcas to Polly.

"Oh, I don't care for my young 'un," replied the mother of the criminal class.

Dorcas hired a room. It was not a prophet's chamber, but it had a bed, a table, and a chair. She put in it food, fuel, a lamp, oil, a bundle of clothes for Mrs. Potus, and a few garments for the child. Thither was Polly removed. Then Dorcas filled for her a basket of small wares, and bade her go about selling them and making her living like an honestwoman and do a mother's part by her child.

Polly Potus began her new life by leaving her child alone all day on the bed while she wandered about the streets. The child was hungry, cold, crying. At night she fed it gin. The neighbors resented the noise made by the solitary babe and forced Polly to carry it with her. As her rent was paid for two months, Mrs. Potus was able to spend all her money on strong drink, which she did systematically. Once she forgot her child, leaving it on a bench in a gin-house, but some one ran after her with it. Once she laid it on the sidewalk and lost it, but a boy found it and brought it to her. Once she left it at her stand near the market, but a policeman restored it to her careless arms. Amid all this misery the child lived and grew.

Meanwhile the father fulfilled his time in duress, and restored to the arms of society, devoted himself to earning dimes, to make up in drinking for thirty day's privation.

After a month of this, he heard that his wife had a decent room with furniture in it. He therefore asserted his martial right to live where Mrs. Potus lived. She made no objection, but said he must pay his share of rent, when rent fell due. Potus made an objection, not to this proposition, but to the rent. To get rid of the child he spent an entire day in carrying it to asylums of various creeds and nationalities. All refused to receive it, funds were low and babies were overnumerous. Then he laid it on a bench in a public square, but an argus-eyed policeman saw him, and threatened to arrest him. The child did not seem likely to relinquish existence as easily as his little brothers and sisters had done.

Potus III often inquired with violence, "why Little Potus had been born, why he had so many children." If he had been a reading man he might have quoted from Hugh Miller that "as type degenerates individuals are apt to multiply."

Potus III became monomaniac on the question of ridding himself of his youngest born. The little space the child occupied in bed and room; the small portion of food and gin that was bestowed on it; the crying of the baby in its neglected state, seemed to this father of the criminal class es to be a mighty imposition upon its parents. Finally, as he could not solve the question by ridding himself of the child, he suddenly concluded to rid the child of himself. Mrs. Potus had gone off with her basket of small wares and had left the baby in the never-made bed. Little Potus was six months old—and he was drunk, dead drunk. He had never sucked a drop of mother's milk that was not strongly alcoholized. Indeed I do not doubt that a study of facts would show that he had been to all intents and purposes drunk before he was born; and in addition, when Mrs. Potus went forth in the morning, she gave her offspring a heavy dram, that the neighbors might not complain of the infant's noise. The child therefore, could make no protest against its unnatural sire, and no one molested Potus III as he emptied the room of every particle of food and furniture. He carried all the things off and sold them for six dollars. The room was left with bare, grimy floor; bare, grimy walls, and nothing therein but a half-naked and hungry infant, laid on the dirty boards. Polly returned to this desolation. She was too drunk to realize her loss. She lay down beside her child and slept all night. Next day, as the room was quite stripped, and a month's rent was due, the agent locked the door, and Mrs. Potus went forth never to return. She would have been glad to leave the child, but the agent would not receive it, in lieu of rent.

Two months after this in a great crowd on Fulton Street, where drays, vans, carriages, trucks, and carts impeded each other, there rose a cry that a man was down. Presently the policemen dragged a corpse from under the horses' feet, and carried it to the sidewalk. The head hung limp over the shoulder; blood flowed from the torn face, a wheel had passed over the chest, scarcely covered by its degraded tatters. It was Potus III, grandson of the well-to-do Deacon Potus, son of the rich wholesale dealer, Potus II, of Boston. They rested the broken body, for a few minutes, on a pile of empty boxes on a corner.

"No use of the hospital," said the police. "He's past all that. He was drunk; he is dead. Take a shutter, boys and carry him to the morgue. No man will claim him. He's not that kind." A woman—staggering, foul, debase l—came along with a child hanging over her shoulder. She looked at the poor corpse. "Serves him right for stealing my things," said Polly Potus, nee Quaff.

As she spoke below her breath, the child was attracted by the appearance of a red pool on the white pine boxes, and reaching down drew a long crimson line with its starveling finger, no one but she who carried it knew that the child's hand had dabbled in its father's blood.

This jury, after exhaustive examinatio and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, an awarded that company the highest prize o fered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving othe companies only gold, silver and bronz medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the com pany, with the Cross of the Legion o Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by th most competent authority in the world i favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

Anxious for Party Success.

WILL ACCEPT A NOMINATION.

From the Minneapolis journal we clip a letter from Grover Cleveland in answer to one from Gen. Edward S. Bragg, of Wisconsin, author of the famous phrase "We love him for the enemies he has made" which announces his willingness to accept a nomination, as follows:

LAKEWOOD, N. J., March 9, 1892.—Hon. Edward S. Bragg: "My Dear Sir: Your letter of the 5th inst. is received. I have thought until now that I might continue silent on the subjects which under the high sanction of yours position as my fellow Democrat and fellow citizen and in your relation as a true and trusted friend, you present to me. If in answering your question I might only consider my personal wishes and my individual ease and comfort, my response would be promptly made, and without the least reservation or difficulty. But if you are right in supposing that the subject is related to a duty I owe to the country and to my party, a condition exists which makes such private and personal considerations entirely irrelevant. I cannot, however, refram from declaring to you that my experience in the great office of President of the United States has so impressed me with the solemnity of the trust and its awful reponsibilities that I cannot bring myself to regard a candidacy for the place as something to be won by personal strife and active self assertion.

"I have also an idea that the presidency is pre-eminently the people's office, and I have been sincere in my constant advocacy of the effective participation in political affairs on the part of all our citizens; consequently, I believe the people should be heard in the choice of their party candidates, and that they themselves should make nominations, as directly as is consistent with open, fair and full party organization and methods.

"I speak of these things solely for the purpose of advising you that my conception of the nature of the presidential office, and my conviction that the voters of our party should be free in the selection of their candidates, preclude the possibility of my leading and pushing a selfseeking canvass for the Presidential nomination, even if I had a desire to be a candidate.

"Believing that the complete supremacy of Democratic principles means increased national prosperity and the increased happiness of our people, I am earnestly anxious for the success of my party. I am confident success is still within our reach, but I believe this is a time for Democratic thoughtfulness and deliberation not only as to candidates, but concerning party action upon questions of immense interest to the patriotic and intelligent voters of safety as the price of their confidence and support. Yours, Very Truly,

GROVER CLEVELAND."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Mch. 11, 1892.

Speaker Crisp will, if his health permits, make the closing speech in the debate now being so ably maintained by the democratic members of the House on the free wool. Mr. Springer will be unable to take any part whatever in the debate, as his physicians say that he must go away as soon as he is well enough to travel, for five or six weeks of absolute rest, before he can resume his duties in the House. The state of Mr. Mills' health is such that it is extremely doubtful wether he will be able to make any set speech, but there will be no lack of speeches, as nearly one third of the democratic members have notified Mr. McMillin, who is in charge of the bill, of their desire to speak. It is probable that some of them will have to wait until one of the other tariff bills is called up, as it is the present intention to vote on the free wool bill on the 21st. inst., so as to get it out of the way of the free coinage bill, which comes up on the 22nd., under the resolution adopted last Monday.

Mr. Harrison has been as precipitate in making public the correspondence with Lord Salisbury concerning the refusal of that official to renew the modus vivendi in Behring's Sea during the coming sealing season, as he was in sending that famous ultimatum to Chili—Mr. Blaine is sick in bed and has had nothing to do with this undue haste. Before the last communication to Lord Salisbury could possibly have been read and digested by him, it was sent to the Senate, something unheard of in time of peace. It is not probable that the Senate will take any action on the arbitration treaty, which preceded the correspondence by one day, until time has been given Lord Salisbury to reply to the last dispatch sent him.

It is generally expected that Representative McCreary of Kentucky will be chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign committee this year. The committee has not yet been selected, but a caucus will be held for that purpose in a few days. Representative McCreary thinks that before the tariff debate which began in the House this week is closed, the country will be fully convinced that the tariff is the paramount issue, and that silver is not such an important matter as some of the talk indulged in on the floor of the House when the vote was taken on the resolution setting aside three days, beginning March 22, for the consideration of the Bland free coinage bill would seem at first glance to indicate.

The House committee on Rivers and Harbors has closed its hearings, hopes to have the bill reported to the House within a week or ten days. Chairman Blanchard says the pressure for appropriations was at least 25 per cent greater this year than he ever knew it to be before, and that facts concerning the development of commerce on the great lakes and navigable waterways of the country were brought before the committee, that are simply astounding to those who have not made a study of the subject. These facts will be embodied in the speech which Mr. Blanchard will make when the bill gets before the House. It is not probable that the committee will be able to get the total appropriations carried by the bill below $20.000.000, without insuring the business interests necessarily involved in the improvement of rivers and harbors.

A special car carrying the remains of the late Representative Kendall, of Kentucky, who died here of appoplexy this week, and Senators Pascoe, Hansborough, Warren and Gibson, and Representatives Paynter, Mansur, Ammerman, Bailey Fellows, Wilson, (Ky.) and Belknap, comprising the special Congressional committee, left here Wednesday afternoon.

The Commissioner of Patents is sending out a circular letter to applicants for printed copies of patents that Congress will be likely to hear from soon. It notifies the applicant that, owning to lack of room for the storage and arrangement of printed copies of patents, their orders cannot be filled until additional room shall be provided by the proper authorities. Congress is the proper authority, and the thousands of manufacturers, inventors and owners of patents, who will be seriously inconvenienced and in many cases needlessly embarrassed by not being able to get copies of patents, will be asking Congress why some part of the $1.000.000 earned by the Patent Office, and now lying idle in the Treasury vaults, is not used to provide that office with the room necessary to properly transact its very important business? There is but one satisfactory answer that Congress can give, and that is to pass a bill authorizing the spending of so much of this money as may be necessary to provide the room needed.

Arguments will be heard by the World's Fair Committee of the House on the 21st inst., on the bill proposing an appropriation for the exposition.

Ex-Representative Clements, of Georgia, has been nominated to be Inter-state Commerce Commissioner, vice William Lindsey, of Kentucky, who declined the place. The appointment is a popular one in Washington, where Mr. Clements has many friends.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

GENERAL REMARKS

The early settlers manifested commendable characteristics, brought out by the anguish of mind on parting with endearing associations of the places they had left to emigrate to Minnesota and the experiences of their journey westwards; and on locating and commencing a home in the new lands, the spirit was loth to find something to replace that which it had left behind: so the immigrants on meeting each other for the first time, an interest in each others welfare was apparent, and strangers became warm friends on short acquaintance. It was an ordeal that tried the soul and seemed to call out the better qualities of man. Hospitality was ever uppermost. People found pleasure in assisting one another, especially the latest arrival, in making homes, and perhaps more true happiness was experienced by the pioneers in their primitive habitations during those early days of Minnesota than in times and places of more luxury. It was to a great extent the realization of the ideal Arcadia. Friendships were formed then that have existed unbroken to the present, and are cherished as fond memories of those who have crossed the dark river.

While there was much romance in the matter of making a home in the Big Woods, there were many unpleasant things in connection therewith to mar the poetical illusion. Living in cabins and temporary shelters, constructed in various ways—of unhewed logs and covered with clapboards or large sheets of elm bark, was not exactly proof against the myriads of mosquitoes and other insects and the frequent rains of the summer of 1855, the latter occurring mostly at night accompanied by incessant blinding flashes of lightning and terifying peals of thunder, rending the stately giants of the forest—

"'Tis the lightning's red gleam, painting hell on the sky!
'Tis the crashing of thunders, the groan of the sphere!"

and the many accompanying inconveniences sometimes, notwithstanding the bright prospect and agreeable social surroundings, had a depressing effect on the pioneers for the time; almost wishing themselves back, secure from storms, under the roofs that sheltered them in childhood, which however the brilliant sunshiny days following those nights of dismay and the invigorating atmosphere of Minnesota had the effect to dispel, and inspire them with new hope.

During the first years of the settlement of the portion of the Big Woods nearest the Mississippi River, the pecuniary circumstances of the immigrants were as varied as in any other walk of life; some came in supplied with ample means while others were limited in that respect, all proceeding with great expectations, justified by the apparent resources of the country, and although the conditions were new there was an apparent prosperity. Money was plentiful; a condition usually accompanying an influx of population. Those having means, expended them in improvements on their premises and in business enterprises, so the opportunities for employment were abundant, and the pioneer, even if he was in straightened circumstances, was enabled to sustain himself and family and improve his home.

Religious services were held occasionally at Wayzata, Greenwood and at other places north of Lake Minnetonka by the Rev Charles Galpin of Excelsior, Congregationalist, who was the pioneer minister of the region bordering on Lake Minnetonka. In 1855 Rev J. J. Camp organized a Methodist society at the house of Irvin Shrewsbury, Independence; the latter being made class leader.

The first school between Lake Minnetonka and the forks of Crow River was taught by Miss Ruth Powers, now the wife of J. D. Young, in 1856; at the village of Greenwood, the first school in the town of Independence was taught by Norman Shook, in 1857-8, near the present site of the school house at Armstrong station, and the first school within the limits of the towns of Orono and Medina was taught by Charles G. Christlieb (brother of the writer) in 1857-8, in a building belonging to Georgs Knettle, on the premises now owned by Jacob Hursh.

INDEPENDENCE-1856-7

Settlers coming to the town of Independance in 1856 and occurrences of that year were as follows: Jacob Rader and family of which Washington and George Rader and Mrs. Allen Hosmer, deceased, were members. The settlement of the Raders was made in the southwest part of the town at a time when the Watertown road had scarcely an existence; they found a mere semblance of road in the shape of a trail, over which a man on foot could travel and thereby save time and distance in travelling from Watertown to Minneapolis, over the road passing by James P. Lyle's and McGary's, but during that year a road suitable for general travel was opened from Watertown to Moffat's road, intersecting the latter at Irvin Shrewsbury's in section 26, which made a direct route from Watertown through Wayzata to Minneapolis, which became known as the Minneapolis and Watertown road.

Other settlers: Bradford H. Hall, C. E. Berkman, latterly vetrenary surgeon of St. Paul, Henry Swingler, Daniel A. Styner and family of which Charles and Frank Styner were members, William Kissinger, John Stevenson and family, John Moore, Cyrus Chapman, William Briggs, William Meeks, William Edgerton, Henry Astrope, Jacob Bryant and family, Wm. Lewis, Wesley W. Hall and Hollis Hall. Capt Lewis H. Williams father of Joshua Williams, now a hardware merchant of Minneapolis, made a pre-emption in Independence in 1856 and during that year two clergymen came in namely. Rev J. J. Turwall Methodist, and family. Rev Abraham Gress, Methodist, and family of which G. M. Gress, now of Sleepy Eye Minn., was a member. These clergymen although not authorized by the conference to act in their professional capacity for that vicinity, frequently held services at the residence of John R. McGary who was also a member of the Methodist denomination.

The marriage of Kelsey Hinman and Lydia A. Moffat, daughter of Job Moffat occurred early in the spring of 1856.

ENGLISH authors have taken up the matter of erecting a monument to James Russell Lowell, and have appointed a committee to raise a private fund for that purpose.

UNDER the federal supreme court decision the mailing of lottery literature is a continuous offense, subjecting the sender to trial at the initial and terminal points. This is what is killing off the lottery business in Louisiana.

THE late Dr. Junker, the African explorer, put more faith in Livingstone's than in Stanley's way of advancing through the dark continent. He never killed a native, and for the most part traveled without a weapon, but still achieved what he wanted.

R. C. BROWN, who went to Colorado in 1859 without a dollar, has now nearly completed at Denver the finest hotel west of the Mississippi, which will cost him $1,500,000. A quarter section of land, which he entered thirty years ago for $200, is to-day worth $5,000,000.

WEATHER prophets will keep at a safe distance from Siam. The king of that country has issued an order providing that no prophet shall be entitled to public confidence unless he has the gift of sitting unharmed in the midst of a sea-coal fire for the space of at least half an hour.

ELIZABETH CADY STANTON tells an amusing story of how, when she was a young girl, the women of her church raised money to educate a young man for the ministry. When he had finished at the theological school the young divine returned to his native town and preached his first sermon on the text: "Let your women keep silence in the churches."

A MAN at Prescott, A. T., had the asthma for six years, during which time he was never able to sleep at night except in a sitting posture. He took the grip a few weeks ago and when he recovered from it his asthma was gone. Asthmatic sufferers hereabout need not make any strenuous efforts to catch the grip, however. It will find them.

THERE is considerable anxiety in Canada over the action of Mr. Newberry, of Chicago, who has introduced in congress a bill providing that no pensions shall be paid to any person who is not a citizen of the United States. There are 1,315 persons residing in Canada permanently who draw pensions for services rendered to the union during the late war secession.

HENRY CABOT LODGE has started a discussion as to whether railroad slaughter can be materially reduced in this country. In 1893 twenty-five thousand men were killed or injured in coupling cars and other railroad work, an increase of three thousand from the previous year. It is proposed to add the duty of preventing accidents to those of the interstate commerce commission.

THE Louisiana lottery has secured a perpetual franchise from the government of Nicaragua, and will transfer its headquarters to Greytown. It will also open branch offices in every capital and chief city of Central and South America, and expects to do business on a more gigantic scale than ever. Other gambling games will be provided for. Greytown will be fitted up as a winter resort for sportive Americans and Europeans, and the place is to be made, if possible, a second Monte Carlo.

THE pension bill reported to the lower house of congress for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, appropriates $134,825,066, being $12,239,484 less than the estimates, and $889,719 less than the appropriation for the current fiscal year. The number of pensioners on the rolls has increased from 242,755 in 1879 to 676,160 in 1891, and the amount disbursed on account of pensions has increased from $25,493,742 in 1879 to $124,415,951 in 1891. The amount appropriated for 1892 was $135,214,785.

RAISIN raising and prune growing are two comparatively new industries in California that are attaining very large proportions, and the domestic products have almost driven the foreign goods from our markets. During the nine months ending September 30, 1891, only 2,836,735 pounds of raisins and 5,809,750 pounds of prunes were imported, as against 12,769,056 pounds of raisins and 35,693,856 pounds of prunes in the same period of 1890. Four or five carloads of raisins are leaving San Diego daily for the east at this time.

THE New York court of appeals has rendered an opinion which shows that married women in that state are still in bondage. A woman fell down a coal hole and sued for damages, recovering $500. The defendant asked for a new trial on the ground that the woman was working for her husband and the court had taken into account her loss of wages. The court of appeals reversed the decision. It held that the services of a wife belonged to her husband. He cannot compel her to perform work except household duties, and if she does any other she cannot compel him to pay for it.

THOSE who look upon Japan as a country far behind the western world in matters of education should read the report of the minister of education for Japan. The school age is the period of eight years, between the sixth and fourteenth year of age, and attendance is obligatory. There are over 28,000 elementary schools controlled by local authorities, with 72,000 teachers and 3,144,000 scholars. The teachers are forbidden to use corporal punishment and they are pensioned when they have given so many years of service. The annual expense of these schools is about $7,000,000.

IN the cathedral of Genoa is preserved, and has been for six hundred years, a vase of immense value. It is cut from a single emerald. It is kept under several locks, the keys of which are in different hands, and it is rarely exhibited in public, and only by an order of the senate. When exhibited it is suspended around the neck of a priest by a cord, and no one is allowed to touch it but him. A decree passed in 1476 forbids anyone going too near the precious relic. A Genoese antiquarian has written a book to demonstrate that this vase is one of the cups made [illegible] by the queen of Sheba.

The urgent deficiency bill ($488,413) was passed. Adjourned to the 14th. In the house bills were introduced authorizing the secretary of the treasury to issue certificates of the denominations of 10 cents, 25 cents and 50 cents, the total amount of such issue not to be more than $25,000,000; to establish a postal telegraph service, and providing that the remaining public lands of the United States be donated to the several states and territories in which they are located. The tariff bill was further discussed.

SATURDAY, March 12.—The senate was not in session. In the house bills were reported favorable for the admission of New Mexico and Arizona as states.

MONDAY, March 14.—In the senate the bill providing that post offices shall be erected in small cities throughout the country was passed. A petition was presented from the Baltimore Methodist Episcopal conference protesting against further restrictive Chinese legislation. The house bill placing the secretary of agriculture in the line of presidential succession was favorably reported and the Behring sea question was discussed. In the house a bill was passed making Council Bluffs, Ia., a port of delivery. The report to accompany the bill to change the naturalization laws was submitted. It recites "the shameful and illegal manner in which aliens have been naturalized in many parts of this country and declares that congress should make laws to amply protect the states against making citizens of criminals, paupers, anarchists and aliens."

FROM WASHINGTON.

For Russia.

NEW YORK, March 15.—Bearing her freight of food for famine-stricken Russia, the Missouri started at 1:30 this afternoon. The snow-bound car loads of flour for which W. C. Edgar, who had the matter in charge, had been waiting, did not arrive in time to go with the rest, but in its place was an equal amount of flour, bag for bag, furnished in exchange for those delayed. In all about 2,100 tons of flour and corn meal were piled up in the hold of the ship.

Beside the cargo of grain were carried 200 head of cattle. These are borne by the company for outside parties, and the freight money received for their passage, some $2,500, was donated by the company for the purchase of additional grain. On starting the ship ran her colors up to the trucks, many flags floated in the breeze from the mastheads and forward rigging and on the bow floated the American flag and just above it was displayed the code signal flag signifying "good bye."

BURIED UNDER DIFFICULTIES.

Hardships Suffered by Senators, Representatives and Others Who Attended the Funeral of the Late Congressman Kendall, of Kentucky.

WASHINGTON, March 15.—The congressional funeral of the late Representative Kendall, of Kentucky, from which the committee has just returned, resulted in an extraordinary tale of suffering and exposure. The committee appointed to escort the body consisted of Senators Warren and Pasco and Representatives John B. Fellows, of New York, Belknap, Paynter, Gillespie and Long.

The funeral party arrived at Moorehead, Ky., which was the last railroad station on their route. Their final destination was 40 miles away, between Moorehead and Liberty. There are no roads traversing the mountains, nor are there any bridges crossing the innumerable rivers and streams. The weather was intensely cold and the streams were swollen.

Before the hearse and the wagons containing the committee had fairly started Representative Fellows returned to Moorehead. A few miles farther on Senator Warren, of Wyoming, succumbed to cold and exhaustion and was left in a mountaineer's hut to await the party's return. One river, the Yokum, crossed the path of the party forty-two times. Each time it was necessary to ford the icy stream and there was danger at times that the coffin would be washed away. The members of the party during these eighty-four fords which it was necessary to make going and returning were frequently up to their waists in the chilly water. The provisions were frozen and the party had nothing to eat for a day. When going down hill it was necessary to tie a rope around the hearse to keep it from plunging down the steep declivities, and this rope was trailed to the rear so that the members of the party might take it in hand and steady the plunging hearse. When the destination was finally reached late the following evening the hearse was entirely wrecked and the coffin rested upon the axle-trees. The coffin itself was so badly broken that the corpse was exposed.

GREAT SUFFERING.

A Blizzard the Cause of Much Hardship Among Settlers in Oklahoma.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., March 15.—The present storm in Kansas and Oklahoma is more severe than any during the winter. The fall of snow varies in depth from 6 to 8 inches on the level, which is proving very troublesome to the railroads. The evening trains from the west are bulletined late from one to four hours and some of them are posted as "indefinite."

A dispatch from Wichita states that the fall of snow in the southwest averages 8 inches on the level. The morning trains passed through there on time, but the evening trains are all late. The telegraph wires west from there are many of them down and it is difficult for the dispatchers to keep the trains on the move. The street railway service at Wichita has been abandoned on account of the heavy snow.

Dispatches from various points in Oklahoma indicate that the blizzard prevails there also. A special from Guthrie states that it has been snowing there fitfully all day, the snow being accompanied by a heavy norther. The fall of snow has not been sufficient to cause delay to railway traffic, but it has caused much discomfort and some suffering among the pioneer settlers in the Indian lands that were opened to settlement last fall. These people are poorly housed, poorly clothed and poorly fed, not yet having had the opportunity to harvest a crop. They live in shanties, tents and dugouts and their suffering will be acute.

The dispatch also states that the greatest suffering is among the negroes who have been lured to Oklahoma by unscrupulous immigrant agents who have promised them sustenance until they shall be able to support themselves. These negroes are from all parts of the south and have no means for providing against emergency. Many of them have no places to sleep, all are poorly clothed and a majority are without money. Those who have gone to the borders of Cheyenne and Cherokee lands to await the proclamation opening them to settlement are of the poorest possible classes and their suffering must be intense.

HER SKULL IN COURT.

Cause of Mrs. Dunton's Death—Dr. Scudder Given a Preliminary Hearing—Conclusive Evidence of Murder Given by Dr. Palmer.

CHICAGO, March 15.—Frank H. Dunton appeared in Justice Brayton's courtroom Monday afternoon and told the story of his wife's death and the circumstances attending it. Dr. Henry Palmer, who in company with Dr. Chittenden had come from Janesville, Wis., recited sensational facts brought out at the post-mortem examination and exhibited a portion of Mrs. Dunton's skull with a ragged hole in one side and several fractured seams across the bony crown. Dr. "Harry" Scudder, the alleged murderer, attended by his wife and brother, dozed in his chair and paid no attention to the startling testimony. Only two witnesses for the prosecution were heard. The preliminary hearing will probably continue several days.

THE GREAT COAL STRIKE.

Serious Effects Being Felt in Many Parts of Great Britain.

LONDON, March 15.—The latest estimates place the number of miners now idle in Great Britain at 350,000. At least 200,000 men in other employments have been thrown out of work by the closing down of industries. The Northeastern Railway Company has stopped many of its trains because of the lack of fuel, and a large number of engineers in the engine works at Crewe, in the county of Chester, have been temporarily dismissed for the same reason. In the Leeds district the strike is severely felt.

BOTH SHOT TO KILL.

Two Oklahoma Men Quarrel and Each Mortally Wounds the Other.

GUTHRIE, O. T., March 14.—The news has just reached here of a murder at Chandler which took place Saturday. James Zule and George Barton, who occupied adjoining claims, engaged in a quarrel. Zule was armed with a Winchester. He fired, seriously injuring Barton. The latter, however, still had strength enough to continue the fight, and snatching the rifle from Zule's hands discharged it, killing Zule instantly. Barton's wound is a dangerous one and he will probably die.

AN AWFUL TRAGEDY.

A Brave Missouri Officer Shot Dead While Trying to Protect a Brutal Murderer from an Angry Mob—His Prisoner Lynched.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., March 15.—Deputy Sheriff Williams, of Taney county, in charge of Wife Murderer Bright, was shot dead in the courtroom at Forsythe Saturday night by a mob that was trying to take the prisoner. Bright was lynched by the mob, but owing to the distance of Forsythe from a railroad the details of the crime did not come out until Monday. Taney county is the seat of the recent Bald Knob outrages, and the factions still exist.

There is very strong feeling over the killing of Williams, and some of the mob may be killed before another day passes. Officer Williams had not drawn a weapon when shot, being engaged in the mere task of removing his prisoner from the room, trying to get out of a door before the mob would reach him.

Bright, the man lynched, lived in the northwestern part of the county and was exceedingly jealous of his wife. One morning she started toward the spring for a bucket of water. Bright, gun in hand, left the house and a moment later the children heard a shot. Bright returned shortly and said that Mrs. Bright had been shot. He again left the house and did not return. The children found the dead body of their mother and gave the alarm.

The farmers hurried to the scene of the tragedy. Quickly a party of pursuers took the trail of the fugitive uxoricide. At each mountain pass the party of hunters received new recruits. Soon the woods were full of armed men, on horseback and on foot, armed with Winchesters, shotguns and revolvers, bent on capturing the murderer at whatever cost. The pursuit was swift and sure. Every ravine and cliff where the fleeing criminal might hide was searched. No terror-stricken fugitive from justice could escape that army of men who pressed so resolutely on his heels. The murderer was run down and captured, taken to Forsyth and lodged in jail.

Saturday a crowd of unusual size gathered at Forsythe to hear the preliminary trial of Bright. The expression was clearly written on the faces of many of the citizens of the county, who remained in town all day. Deputy Sheriff Williams had the prisoner in charge.

The courtroom was crowded with interested listeners, and the preliminary hearing was progressing quietly when a mob of about 100 men, all well armed and with determination to avenge the wife murderer's crime written on every face, surrounded the building in which court was being held. A deputation twenty-five strong was sent into the courtroom for the prisoner. As they made their appearance with arms drawn a panic ensued, and most of the spectators, anticipating trouble, beat a hasty retreat.

The spokesman of the deputation demanded that the prisoner be turned over to the men. Williams refused and tried to reason with them, urging them to allow the law to take its course. The justice of the peace before whom the hearing was being held also pleaded with them to withdraw and to respect the law. The deputation, however, was dead to reason and insisted that the prisoner be turned over to the impromptu court outside the court room. Still Williams declined to give up his man, who all this time looked as if he knew his hour had come.

Finally the delegation, spurred on by shouts of impatience and cries of "Hang him!" "Lynch him!" from the mob without, made a rush for Bright and his guard. Williams drew a brace of revolvers with which he was armed and was about to fire when a rifle shot rang out and he fell dead at the prisoner's feet. The shot had penetrated his heart.

The rest of the work of the mob was quickly done. Bright was quickly seized and dragged out of the courtroom. A rope was unceremoniously placed around his neck. One end was swung over the limb of a pine tree on the mountain side within half a mile of the courthouse and he was swung up. His body was riddled with bullets.

Before dying he confessed to having taken his wife from home last Monday and tying her to a tree while he deliberately aimed and shot her to death within hearing of his little children, four of whom were under 6 years of age. The youngsters are without a relative this side of Kentucky.

Taney county is wild with excitement over the killing of Williams. He was a young man well known in Taney and adjoining counties. Nine of the twelve men that first came to the jail were well identified. Most of the mob came from the neighborhood where the woman was murdered. This last killing makes a total of seventy-two people killed in Taney county since the war.

Thomas is still in jail awaiting an investigation.

Preparing to Hoard Gold.

WASHINGTON, March 15. — Reports made to the comptroller of the currency from the various money centers of the United States, and particularly in the east, indicate an intention upon the part of the banking institutions of the country to hoard gold in anticipation of the enactment of a silver coinage law. Many of the bank examiners in their reports state that officials of the banks do not hesitate to declare that the passage of a silver bill by congress will immediately put gold at a premium of from 20 to 25 per cent., and they propose to be prepared for it.

A SARATOGA CO. MIRACLE.

Helpless for Years and Excluded from Hospitals as Incurable.

The Remarkable Experience of Charles Quant as Investigated by an Albany (N. Y.) Journal Reporter — A Story of Surpassing Interest.

[Albany (N. Y.) Journal, March 4th.]

SARATOGA, March 4th. — For some time past there have been reports here and elsewhere in Saratoga county of a most remarkable— indeed, so remarkable as to be miraculous—cure of a most severe case of locomotor ataxia, or creeping paralysis, simply by the use of a popular remedy known as "Pink Pills for Pale People," prepared and put up by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Morristown, N. Y., and Brockville, Ont. The story was to the effect that Mr. Chas. A. Quant, of Galway, who for the last six or eight years has been a great sufferer from creeping paralysis and its attendant ills, and who had become utterly powerless of all self-help, had, by the use of a few boxes of the Pink Pills for Pale People, been so fully restored to health as to be able to walk about the street without the aid of crutches. The fame of this wonderful, miraculous cure was so great that the Evening Journal reporter thought it worth his while to go to Galway to call on Mr. Quant to learn from his lips, and from the observation and testimony of his neighbors, if his alleged cure was a fact or only an unfounded rumor. And so he drove to Galway and spent a day and a night there in visiting Mr. Quant, getting his story and interviewing his neighbors and fellow-townsmen. It may be proper to say that Galway is a pretty little village of about 400 people, delightfully located near the center of the town of Galway, in Saratoga county, and about 17 miles from Saratoga Springs. Upon inquiry the residence of Mr. Charles A. Quant was easily found, for everybody seemed to know him, speak well of him, and be overflowing with surprise and satisfaction at his wonderful cure and restoration to the activities of enterprising citizenship, for Mr. Quant was born in Galway and had spent most of his life there. Mr. Quant was found at his pretty home, on a pleasant street nearly opposite the academy. In response to a knock at the door it was opened by a man who, in reply to an quiry if Mr. Quant lived there and was at home, said: "I am Mr. Quant. Will you come in?" After a little general and preliminary conversation, and after he had been apprised of the object for which the Journal reporter had called upon him, he, at request, told the story of himself and of his sickness and terrible sufferings, and of the ineffectual treatment he had had, and of his final cure by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and cheerfully gave assent to its use for publication. He said: "My name is Charles A. Quant. I am 37 years old. I was born in the village of Galway, and, excepting while traveling on business and a little while in Amsterdam, have spent my whole life here. My wife is a native of Ontario. Up to about eight years ago I had never been sick and was then in perfect health. I was fully six feet tall, weighed 180 pounds and was very strong. For 12 years I was a traveling salesman for a piano and organ company and had to do a great deal of heavy lifting, got my meals very irregularly and slept in enough 'spare beds' in country houses to freeze any ordinary man to death, or at least give him the rheumatism. About eight years ago I began to feel distress in my stomach and consulted several doctors about it. They all said it was dyspepsia, and for dyspepsia I was treated by various doctors in different places, and took all the patent medicines I could hear of that claimed to be a cure for dyspepsia. But I continued to grow gradually worse for four years. Then I began have pain in my back and legs and became conscious that my legs were getting weak and my step unsteady, and then I staggered when I walked. Having received no benefit from the use of patent medicines, and feeling that I was constantly growing worse, I then, upon advice, began the use of electric belts, pads and all the many different kinds of electric appliances I could hear of, and spent hundreds of dollars for them, but they did me no good. (Here Mr. Quant showed the Journal reporter an electric suit of underwear for which he paid $124). In the fall of 1888 the doctors advised a change of climate, so I went to Atlanta, Ga., and acted as agent for the Estey Organ Company. While there I took a thorough electric treatment, but it only seemed to aggravate my disease, and the only relief I could get from the sharp and distressing pains was to take morphine. The pain was so intense at times that it seemed as though I could not stand it, and I almost longed for death as the only certain relief. In September of 1888 my legs gave out entirely and my left eye was drawn to one side, so that I had double sight and was dizzy. My trouble so affected my whole nervous system that I had to give up business. Then I returned to New York and went to the Roosevelt hospital, where for four months I was treated by specialists and they pronounced my case locomotor ataxia and incurable. After I had been under treatment by Prof. Starr and Dr. Ware for four months, they told me they had done all they could for me. Then I went to the New York hospital on Fifteenth street, where, upon examination, they said I was incurable and would not take me in. At the Presbyterian hospital they examined me and told me the same thing. In March, 1890, I was taken to St. Peter's hospital in Albany, where Prof. H. H. Hun frankly told my wife my case was hopeless; that he could do nothing for me and that she had better take me back home and save my money. But I wanted to make a trial of Prof. Hun's famous skill and I remained under his treatment for nine weeks; but secured no benefit. All this time I had been growing worse. I had become entirely paralyzed from my waist down and had partly lost control of my hands. The pain was terrible; my legs felt as though they were freezing and my stomach would not retain food, and I fell away to 120 pounds. In the Albany hospital they put 17 big burns on my back one day with red-hot irons and after a few days they put 14 more burns on and treated me with electricity, but I got worse rather than better; lost control of my bowels and water, and upon advice of the doctor, who said there was no hope for me, I was brought home, where it was thought that death would soon come to relieve me of my sufferings. Last September, while in this helpless and suffering condition, a friend of mine in Hamilton, Ont., called my attention to the statement of one John Marshall, whose case had been similar to my own, and who had been cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

"In this case Mr. Marshall, who is a prominent member of the Royal Templars of Temperance, had after four years of constant treatment by the most eminent Canadian physicians been pronounced incurable, and was paid the $1,000 total disability claim allowed by the order in such cases. Some months after Mr. Marshall began a course of treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and after taking some 15 boxes was fully restored to health.

"I thought I would try them and my wife sent for two boxes of the pills and I took them according to the directions given on the wrapper on each box. For the first few days the cold baths were pretty severe, as I was so very weak, but I continued to follow instructions as to taking the pills and treatment, and even before I had used up the two boxes of pills I began to feel beneficial effects from them. My pains were not so bad; I felt warmer; my head felt better; my food began to relish and agree with me; I could straighten up; the feeling began to come back into my limbs; I began to be able to get about on crutches; my eye came back again as good as ever, and now, after the use of eight boxes of the pills—at a cost of only $4.00—see!—I can with the help of a cane only, walk all about the house and yard, can saw wood, and on pleasant days I walk downtown. My stomach trouble is gone; I have gained 10 pounds; I feel like a new man, and when the spring opens I expect to be able to renew my organ and piano agency. I cannot speak in too high terms of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, as I know they saved my life after all the doctors had given me up as incurable."

Other citizens of Galway, seeing the wonderful cure of Mr. Quant by the Pink Pills for Pale People, are using them. Frederick Sexton, a sufferer from rheumatism, said he was finding great benefit from their use, and Mr. Schultz, who had suffered from chronic dysentery for years, said he had taken two boxes of the pills and was already cured.

Mr. Quant had also tried Faith cure, with experts of that treatment in Albany and Greenville, S. C., but with no beneficial results.

A number of the more prominent citizens of Galway, as Rev. C. E. Herbert, of the Presbyterian church; Prof. James E. Kelly, principal of the academy; John P. and Harvey Crouch, and Frank and Edward Willard, merchants, and many others to whom Mr. Quant and his so miraculous cure by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, are well known, were pleased to have the opportunity of bearing testimony to the high character of Mr. Quant, and of verifying the story of his recovery from the terrible affliction from which he had for so long a time been a sufferer.

Truly, the duty of the physician is not to save life, but to heal disease.

The remarkable result from the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in the case of Mr. Quant, induced the reporter to make further inquiries concerning them, and he ascertained that they are not a patent medicine in the sense in which that term is generally used, but a highly scientific preparation, the result of years of study and careful experiment. They have no rival as a blood builder and nerve restorer and have met with unparalleled success in the treatment of such diseases as paralysis, rheumatism, sciatica, St. Vitus' dance, palpitation of the heart, that tired feeling which affects so many, and all diseases depending upon a watery condition of the blood or shattered nerves.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities, and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood and restore the glow of health to pale or sallow cheeks. In the case of men they affect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork, or excesses of whatever nature.

On further inquiry the writer found that these pills are manufactured by The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and Morristown, N. Y., and are sold in boxes, (never in bulk by the hundred) at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., from either address. The price at which these pills are sold makes a course of treatment comparatively inexpensive as compared with other remedies, or medical treatment.

Postal Facilities in Early San Francisco.

The post office of that time was a frame building of one story and an attic on the corner of Clay and Pike streets. There was but small accommodation here for clerks and "handlers," and still less for the impatient, peremptory and home-hungry crowd who came daily, but most of all on mail-days, which was once a month, and took the small windows and loopholes by storm. To avoid confusion and dangerous conflict, long queues were formed, extending from the windows along Clay street to the Plaza, and along Pike street sometimes as far as Sacramento, and even to the chaparral beyond. Here traders, miners, merchants, gamblers, and adventurers of every complexion waited in their places, often from the afternoon of one day, all night long, to the morning of the next, in the mud and the soaking rain, with weary limbs and anxious hearts. Men whose strength was unequal to the strain were glad to employ others to hold their places for them through the long hours; and there were those who, while not seeking or expecting letters for themselves, secured good standings in the line before the coming of the crowd, only to sell their right of place to richer men whose time was money. From ten to twenty dollars was a common price for such service.—Century.

New Rice is Indigestible.

It is not generally known that new rice is one of the most indigestible substances that can be eaten. It is almost certain, when eaten directly after gathering, to produce various derangements of the digestive organs, and in countries where the rice is grown the fact is so well known that the people never eat it until it has been kept at least one year. In India, where rice is the staple diet of the people, they never, save in cases of famine, use the rice until it is two or three years old.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

Her Inference.

"You don't know how to play chess, do you, Miss Adlet?" asked Miss Skitts, with a look at the clock, which indicated 12:30 p. m.

"Why, yes, I do, Miss Skitts. What made you think I didn't?"

"Why, you don't seem to know when it's your move."—Jury.

Grounds for Hope.

"What progress are you making with Miss Sweete?"

"No perceptible progress as yet, but I hope for a favorable change in a day or two."

"Indeed? On what grounds?"

"Her mother has been warning her against me."—N. Y. Press.

"HOME, SWEET HOME."

"I'm going home, I'm going home!"
A ragged urchin cried one day;
The blue sky looked a far-off dome,
As he pursued his homeward way.
I wonder if "sweet home" to him
Had music's meaning soft and clear,
Those words that mock, or seem a hymn,
According to the list'ning ear.

The urchin's voice was jubilant;
And yet I judged his home must be
Where daily toil kept off grim want,
Or struggled with chill poverty.
But if the lamp of love burns bright
Young hearts to warm, and cheer and bless,
'Tis still "sweet home" where day and night
Is felt some human happiness.

A palace home without love's spell
Can only be a stately inn,
Though mortals are constrained to dwell,
Its cheerless, sheltering walls within,
And dream, with undefined desire,
Of something which they do not know,
Of peace to which their hearts aspire,
Which only love can here bestow!
—Camilla Crosland, in Chambers' Journal.

AN EDITOR'S LETTER.

It Bore a Message of Forgiveness to Two Loving Hearts.

I KNEW all the parties connected with it—old Graham, who started the Daily Gazette, and who died three years ago; young Harry Brittain, who now owns the paper, and Ada Graham — Addie, everybody calls her—who married Harry Brittain. Harry was as smart a journalist as I ever met. He attracted old Graham's attention right away by a clever thing he sent in on a social subject to the Gazette, and the old man asked him to contribute regularly, which eventually ended in his joining the staff. And the young fellow had no more earnest or happier reader than Addie.

They had met casually at the office, and there is little doubt but what it was the old, old story over again—love at first sight. Why, Harry used to positively make love to the proprietor's daughter through the leaders and articles he wrote. If he wrote a story, the girl's name was more frequently "Addie" than not, or at any rate it began with an A. And the description of the heroine was pretty sure to tally with his sweetheart. There was no mistake about it, we could read through the lines at the office; and so could Addie at home; but old Graham never had the shadow of an idea of it.

The old man was a widower. He was what a young generation would call a disagreeable customer, a grumpy individual. And I admit that he was. People were apt to mistake his bluffness for temper, and I've no doubt in many cases they were correct.

But there was one soft spot in his heart, and you don't want me to tell you who it was for. Addie was his only child, and he worshiped her. She was just his one thought, and when he entered his home at night he threw off the paper, so to speak, and wrapped himself up in the happiness which his child seemed to bring.

Well, you know how it all ended. Harry Brittain went straight away to old Graham and told him how he loved his daughter. The old fellow acted very foolishly—he discharged the young man, and told his daughter that she must never see him again. I can understand his feelings. Harry was not the man he wanted for her, and he himself did not want to lose his child, who was all in all to him.

Harry was a determined fellow, and he was not the man to give up thinking of the girl he loved with all his heart so easily. He had a ready pen, and hoped to earn a good livelihood, as his work was known and much sought after. There was a lot of talk about his leaving the Daily Gazette in the papers, and some of the society organs ventured to hint at the real motive, though no definite statement was made. Old Graham was an influential man, and although evidently the scribes knew "something" it was kept back.

To come to a point, Harry and Addie got married. It was a runaway match, and the old man would not receive his daughter back again. Twelve months passed by, but neither he nor his child had met. Evil times had fallen upon Harry; his work seemed to be dwindling down to a mere nothing. We knew his work well, there was no mistaking its style, but what little appeared was wanting in the brilliancy that characterized his earlier efforts. We journalists knew what it all meant. He was in trouble. There was a strain for every line he wrote; we could see it; we could tell it. You want to be happy and free to write well. Harry wasn't, and I feared his poor wife shared his unhappiness.

As for old Graham, his face grew paler, his hair whiter. In a word, he loved his child as much as ever, perhaps more, but he could never beat down the arguments which kept rising in his heart. Why did she leave him? He never thought that there would always be love in the heart of the girl for her father, though she had married.

At that time I was on the staff of the Gazette, responsible sub-editor. It was a Monday, and only that very day I had found out the whereabouts of Harry and Addie. I didn't call, but from discreet inquiries I made I learned that they were just living—an existence, in fact—in rooms in Islington. A little one had been born to them. They were very hopeful and very happy, poor things! I had made up my mind to send them something anonymously on the morrow. I little thought, though, what it would be. It was only a copy of the Gazette, but what a copy it was!

It was Monday night, and we were just going to press with Tuesday's paper. Old Graham always stopped until the paper was finished, and I had noticed how anxious and unsettled he appeared all day long. I remembered that it was just a year ago to-morrow since his daughter left him, so perhaps that accounted for it.

I was just reading a proof of the last leader when Hopkins, who looked after the advertisements, came into my room and startled me by saying that the whole page advertisement of "Harrison's Cocoa" was to be held over.

"There's nothing else to go in its place," said Hopkins, "and the guv'nor says that he wants the page himself."

"Good gracious!" I exclaimed. "It's nearly eleven o'clock now; a dozen men could scarcely write sufficient to fill it by the time we go to press."

Just then I heard the bell in old Graham's room ring. I knocked at his door and entered.

"Langley," he said to me, very earnestly and looking me full in the face, "I have every confidence in you."

I thanked him.

"Is there time to get a dozen words fac-similed?" he asked.

"Yes, sir," I replied, "we can manage that easily."

He handed me a half sheet of note paper.

"Langley," he said, more earnestly than before, "don't look at that yet. We must pay the full price of atonement to those we have wronged. The whole newspaper world knows how I have treated my son—my son and daughter. My actions must speak accordingly. Langley, my heart is breaking for a sight of my child again—my conscience wants satisfying for the wrong I have done her husband. You have in your hand the copy for the page. Yes, it is to be the whole page—let the words be copied exactly in my handwriting, let them go right in the middle, so that they and everybody may know I am in earnest."

I could not speak. I left the room and opened the piece of paper. I nearly laughed aloud for joy when I read it, for I liked Harry and respected his wife. But the tears soon blinded my eyes. This is what I read:

To my son and daughter:
Come home to-day
Shall be waiting for you your loving Father.

I rushed downstairs. I watched those precious words being copied. As soon as every line had been faithfully reproduced I hastened to Mr. Graham's room with a proof of it. The old man was crying, and as he looked at it the tears fell on the paper. I could not speak a word. At last—at last the whole paper was ready to go to press. I saw old Graham leave his room; I followed him. I seemed to know where he was going—it was to the machine room downstairs. With a pale and anxious face he waited for the first great thud of the machine, when the clean white paper would roll over the type and come out with—his invitation. And what a costly one!

Now the machine has started—now the paper is passing through. Like a flash of lightning it came out at the other end. The old man seized the first impression—as quickly I seized the second. He saw my action.

"Where are you going?" he cried.

"I'm going to take it to them myself," was my response as I flew up the stairs.

It was now half-past three, but there are always plenty of hansoms about Fleet street at this time, and you don't want me to tell you that I shouted to the driver at the top of my voice: "Chesterton street, Islington—and drive!"

The precious copy of the paper was in my hand, and by the light of the lamps I read it again and again. At last we reached Chesterton street—No. 4—my hand was on the knocker.

It was Harry Brittain's voice behind the bolted door which cried: "Who's there?"

"Harry, Harry, open it quick. I'm Fred Langley. Open the door," I said, excitedly. "Cabby, don't go."

Cabby was kept waiting for twenty minutes, and when it started off again there were three people in it. We drove to Regent's park.

You know the rest. Whilst the paragraph was creating a tremendous sensation amongst the public that day, a happy trio were seated together in the morning-room at Regent's park. I left them together. I need hardly tell you that the evening papers had a great deal to say about the advertisement, and made no small sensation of it. But they were all silenced on the following morning. I had the pleasure of again having old Graham's writing fac-similed, and he—in a moment of what I would call eccentric happiness—once again held over the full-page advertisement of "Harrison's Cocoa," and these words appeared right in the center of the sheet:

My message of yesterday
Has been answered.

Believe me, that the circulation of the Daily Gazette had doubled itself in a week.—Yankee Blade.

Her Train of Thought.

Masculine Voice (from first floor which is the one above me)—Elmira, my dear, Elmira? Do I not perceive a strange odor as of something burning emanating from the regions of the cook room?

Feminine Voice (from nowhere in particular)—Ah, yes. Won't you just come down and remove the dinner from the fire and send for something to eat? I am writing an article for the Sanitary Era on the chemistry of foods and the modes of preparing it and I wish you wouldn't interrupt my train of thoughts. —Pharmaceutical Era.

—Mrs. de Tone—"And what did you think of Rome?" Mrs. Startup—"Oh, they have such miserable shops there! Would you believe it? I went to every shop in Rome without finding some buttons I want to match!"—Once a Week.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—M. Guy de Maupassant is suffering from a disease of the nervous system, and has been ordered by his doctors to take a complete rest. He is sanguine that he will recover, but his friends fear that he may become insane.—N. Y. Critic.

—His royal highness the prince of Wales is very much interested in the horse-raising business, and has decided to establish sales every two years of the hackneys, bred at Sandringham. The first will take place early in July, and Albert Edward will himself test their speed.

—It is said that Mercedes Lopez, a Mexican woman who lives on the Rio Grande, is perhaps the longest-haired woman in the world. She is some five feet in height, and when she stands erect her hair trails on the ground four feet eight inches. Her hair is so thick that she can draw it around her so as to completely hide herself. Her present suit of hair is only five years old.

—James Whitcomb Riley was in his younger days an enthusiastic and clever amateur actor. It is believed that had he gone on the stage permanently his career would have been famous. One of his friends says that at one time, when Riley was cast for the character of an old man, he went about the streets for weeks studying the gestures, poses and utterances of an aged acquaintance instead of trusting to mere imagination.

—It is said of the late Bishop Crowther, a native of Africa, that he astonished the English by emerging from a second-class car one very hot summer day with two thick overcoats on. He was accustomed to tropical heat. At dinner one day an inquisitive little English girl, who sat next to him, was observed to be wetting her finger and rubbing it upon the bishop's hand to see if the black came off. He was a great humorist, and appreciated the little lassie's curiosity.

—Among men noted for wonderful memories were Milton, who was said to be able to repeat Homer; Prof. Lawson, who boasted that he could repeat the whole of the Bible except a few verses; Lord Macaulay, who made the same boast about "Pilgrim's Progress" and "Paradise Lost;" Dr. Lerden, a friend of Sir Walter Scott, who could repeat an act of parliament, on hearing it read but once, and a London reporter, who took no notes, but could write out an unexpected debate verbatim; Henry Clay could not memorize a single stanza of a poem, but never forgot a name, a face or an argument.

—The daughter of Osman Pasha, the hero of Plevna, has become somewhat famous in Turkey of recent years for her poetical gifts. She lives on the heights of Pera, in a house that overlooks the blue Bosporus and the minarets of Constantinople, where every prospect pleases and there is enough of poetry in the scene to inspire even a prose writer. Though one of the sultan's subjects she has a great fondness for the civilization of western Europe and is well versed in the languages and literatures of Germany, France and England. She is young, not more than twenty-eight, but as she was married to a rich nobleman when only thirteen her view of life has been extensive.

HUMOROUS.

—"Ah," yawned a bachelor, "this world is but a gloomy prison!" "To those in solitary confinement."—Once a Week.

—"Are you engaged?" inquired the lady of Bridget at the intelligence office. "No, mum; but I have regular company for four nights o' the week." —Boston Post.

—Cora—"Why do you think Attorney Jimpson is destined to become a supreme judge?" Dora—"He says he has decided I am the prettiest girl he ever saw."—N. Y. Herald.

—The Ancient Beauty.—"Think of it, Cecilia, last night at the ball I listened to five declarations of love." Her Friend—"You must have been sitting behind a pretty girl."—Fliegende Blaetter.

—Mrs. Tompkins—"I don't think I'll take this changeable silk after all." Clerk—"Why not, ma'am?" Mrs. Tompkins—"Because I'm not always at home on the cook's afternoon out."—N. Y. Herald.

—Labor Agitator—"My friend, are you not in favor of the eight-hour movement?" Abe Lazy (the tramp)—"Movement! Who ever heard of me being in favor of any kind of movement?"—Kate Field's Washington.

—"No, John," said the affectionate wife of a politician, "I don't want any woman's suffrage." "Why not?" "Because I'd always feel like voting for you for office, and I don't think I could conscientiously do it."—Washington Star.

—Irate Female—"See here! do you mean to tell me that I have got such an ugly-looking nose as that?" Photographer—"But my apparatus can not lie, madam." Irate Female—"Then, for goodness' sake, go and get one that can."

—"I'm not going to play with Willie Waffles any more," was Flossie's dictum. "Willie is a very nice little boy," said her mother. "I don't like him. In fact, I don't like boys at all, mamma. I suppose it's because I'm not old enough."

—"Daughter, isn't it getting late?" asked Mr. Munn, as he peeped into the parlor at 11:30, and interrupted a conversation between her and her best beau. "Yes, papa," replied Miss Munn sweetly, "it usually does about this time of night."—Brooklyn Life.

—Wanted the Author.—Author of a new play in Far Western theater—"Hark! What's that queer noise?" Western Manager—"Comes from the audidence." "Eh? Is that their style of applauding?" "No; it's the clicking of revolvers. I think they are getting ready to call the author."

—One Among.—He (tenderly)—"Ah, Miss Maria, you are the one among ten thousand altogether lovely." She (pouting)—"I don't think that's a bit nice, Mr. Stockson-Bonds." He (in surprise)—"I beg your pardon." She (exegetically)—"Why didn't you say one among four hundred.—Detroit Free Press.

PICK OF LANDS

In order to close a large New York estate it is necessary to place on the market at low prices, and on easy terms, a lot of choice farm lands, selected at an early day by a prominent official of the Northern Pacific R. R., from the celebrated wheat region in the Eastern portion of North Dakota. These lands are in a well settled prosperous region near the railroad and convenient to churches, schools and markets, and must be sold within a short time. Especially adapted for colonies. Immediate application will be necessary to secure any portion of them. For full particulars address J. K. WEST, DETROIT LAKE, Minnesota.

DELANO DIARY.

—"Little Potus" is crowded out this week.

—Read the Township Financial statement.

—Don't forget the Democratic Caucus, 3 o'clock Thursday the 24.

—A broken frog near the River street crossing caused trains over the G. N., to slow up on Wednesday.

—Rev. Frank Millspaugh, of Minneapolis held Episcopal services here on Monday afternoon and at Rockford in the evening.

—Messrs. King, Pidgeon, Gray, and others from the northern part of the county were entertaining justice Billings on Monday.

—John B. Plattner is taking a lay off for a few weeks from business cares. August Sicloff is his successor at the cheap cash store.

—Notice the change of J. Benner's advertisment. He has adjourned his sale until Thursday, the 24th inst. when he will commence again.

—The village council will meet on Monday evening and receive bids for night watch. A good man should be employed for the place and price enough paid to insure good work.

—J. S. Cooper came near drowning his valuable team last week while crossing the river near the site for the new bridge at Wright's ford. The Sturman boys helped haul the horses out.

—Rev. Davies and wife on their way to visit "her folks" had a break down owing to the unusual roughness of the roads and left their vehicle by the road side till a more convenient season.

—The retiring town officers and the Eagle do not appear to agree in account keeping any better than the county auditor and the editor of that bird. Now there appears a difference of a couple of hundred dollars on the bridge at Marths.

—Chris Hehl and son, August, of Long Lake, passed through town on their way to the city with a lot of calves and milk cows, purchased at Delano and Watertown fairs. Mr. H. is getting to be one of the heaviest buyers at the fairs —On Tuesday a year and a half old boy of Paul Janikula's died from the effects of a scald received by pulling a kettle of hot water over onto himself about 24 hours before. The family have the sympathy of the entire community in this sad affliction.

—Rev. J. R. Davies got right down to business last Sabbath evening in denouncing various wrong doings and wickedness in high places. The people seem to rathes enjoy such sermons occasionally, judging from the gradual growth of his audiences.

—At the meeting of the Board of education of Delano, held on Saturday evening, there was present, President G. W. Ingerson, J. A. Brasie, I. Gutzwiller, Jr. and John Cunningham. In regard to the breaking of the register at the school house by Charley Wiese considerable descussion was had. Charley and his father came in to be heard, and claimed, it was accidental. Several of those present testified as to having tested the strength of the register by having from two to four persons stand on it and teeter. Mr. Gutzwiller said he stood on it soon after it was put there and thinks it ought not to break without rough usage. Don't think the boy intended breaking it. The general belief of the board appeared to be that the boy did not intend to break the register but that the rules of the board must be sustained. Mr. Cunningham moved that Prop. Love be sustained in suspending the pupil till damages were paid, Carried. Mr Gutzwiller moved that the boy remain suspended till the damages are paid. Carried.

Mr. Gutzwiller moved that the grate business be settled for the actual cost to the district. No. second.

Mr. Cunningham moved that Chas Wiese pay $1.30 cost, freight included, provided the district would have to buy another one.

The furnace company had notified the Board that the price would be $3.90, which, with the freight, 40 cts would be $4.30 but that they would not charge the district anything. Mr. Gutzwiller said "I wish I had not got that bill" The motion carried. Cunningham and Brasie in the affirmative, Gutzwiller in the negative.

Cunningham moved that there be no Spring vacation. Carried. Gutzwiller moved that the teachers be allowed one day to visit the Rockford school the day to be made up at the close of the term. Carried. Louis Stronch was given more time in which to haul wood on account of bad roads. Several applications to teach were reported as being on hand. A letter from Mrs. Belle Shaver remitting 60 cts in Stamps for payment for the telegram sent by her resigning her position as teacher was read.

—Mr. B. Riley, the newly elected constable of whom the Eagle complains as being a stranger, lived in Delano nearly five years ago and on a farm in Rockford town until recently when he returned to this village. He has the reputation of being an honest man. Should the county continue its account the editor of the bird may become as well acquainted before the year is up with Mr. Riley as he is with constable Ball who drew some of the money charged up in the County financial report of last year to State vs. Gutzwiller.

—We took occasion to consult Hon. B. F. Christlieb, yesterday, while he was in our village, as to the probable cost of establishing a grade for our streets. He is familiar with such business having done work of the kind, himself in his earlier days. He says it can be done for considerably less than $100. and if the old plat, made years ago, could be on hand for reference it would greatly facilitate matters and lessen the cost. The village council that had the old plat should produce it at once and as soon as the weather is warmer the lines could be established before our new buildings are begun, with the opening of spring. This is a very much needed improvement.

Councilman Wittman then turned over the keys and other "paraphanalia" of office to his successors.

His Hon. John Coolen then took the oath of office, Recorder Hitz conducting the ceremonies, after which he informed the old council that he was not well prepared for a speech, got a bad cold, thanked them for what had been said. DR. PRICE'S Cream Baking Powder.

Used in Millions of Homes—40 Years the Standard.

The political editor of the Buffalo Journal "supposes" that "if" the party lines had been strictly drawn Democrats would have stood a poor chance for the past 20 years in Wright county. He mght have added

Where, O, where would be,
The Honerable A. Y. E?

The Waverly Tribune and the Buffalo Jornal dont seem to like party politics, and yet one claims to be a Democrat and the other claims to be a Republican newspaper. What's the use in making a claim to partizanship if there are no principles to support. Why not come out and join hands for the best man and the spoils, and have done with it in the paper as well as in the caucuses and conventions?

A CORRECTION.

Mr. Tanner, do you not think it pretty bad taste to make such a fuss about an oversight in Mss. or proof which allowed a figure five to be misplaced by a cipher in my last communication. But then I presume you feared that if you did not make a noise about it, the public would think you did not know any better.

Such miserable quibbles do not help even so desparate a case as yours. Argument would be much better.

M. E. BENNETT.

That Squandered Surplus.

The squandering of the surplus in the town treasury. Now who squandered the surplus? I needn't to say Strauch dit it, nor Strauch say Schaust did it, but I say the voters of the town done it. Didn't they vote to build the Quady bridge, and didn't they vote to build that stone culvert at Marth's and didn't they vote the $800. bond for the Ruckholdt bridge. Now the culvert at Marth's cost $798.50 whereof the county paid $250. and the town $548.50. Now if the Eagle man or any of the kickers could do it any cheaper why didn't they bring in their bids? But I don't think that's what sticks in his gizzard. I suppose if the town board would have allowed his bill for his blank road petitions that he sold to someone and don't know who to, and then charged them to the town he wouldn't have quite so much to say or if there was a big surplus to be divided.

FRANKLIN, March, 14, '92.

CHAS. STEIN.

Township Affairs.

EDITOR GAZETTE—It was to be expected that I would last week come in for a good share of the loathesome, slavering of the Buzzard, but that the inoffensive board of supervisors should also get a drubbing most people perhaps don't understand. For were they not so willing last summer to argue the petitions for a special town meeting, and vote for the $800.00 and this after two successive town meetings had voted very near unanimous that the Ruckhold bridge should not be rebuilt. And so what is the matter now that the Ch. St. P. dont approve of their action? Well it is this and nothing more. They rejected the following bill which was presented to them at their March 1st meeting:

Town of Franklin Dr. to Ign. Gutzwiller,

Oct. 9, 90. To two reg. poll lists: folders with insets	$ .35
To 3 reg. poll lists for posts with notices insets	.30
To 2 delq. road tax lists with insets	.35
	$1.00
" 17, To additional poll lists with insets	.15
" 24, To 2 doz. road petitions	.80
To 1 doz. Sup. notice hearing	.40
To ½ doz road orders with award of damages	.50
	$1.70
Nov. 3d, 1890, To blank paper	.15
" 11, To 2 delqt. road tax blanks with insets	.30
" 12, To 2 doz. Sup. notice of hearing	.80
Jan. 13, 1891, To 2 doz. " hearing	.80
Feb. 7, 1891, To ½ qure abstract cap	.20
" 1 doz. notice town meeting	.25
March 9, 1891, To 1 doz. an. rcpt. of overseer	.25
Total	$5.60

It will be noticed that from October 24, 1890, to Feb. 7, 1891 at three different times, 5 dozen notices of hearing were charged for. What did they need them for, when the records show one road petition was acted upon and in this the papers were not properly drawn up so that the new board had to do it over again. Did the town clerk want to buy out his worthless trash? He says he did not order them all.

Delinquent road tax blanks! When there is and was in the office enough to do for several years to come.

But the main nigger in this job is the road petition blanks. Just think of it. A few years ago this fellow raised such a big howl when the county board by an error allowed similar blanks to W. S. Booth, what righteous indignation went forth from his infamous den: the world shook on its foundation; it was an offense that only states prison could satisfy. And now, alas! he charges the very same thing, has charged and received pay for the very same kind of blanks, whenever he could hoodwink an unsuspecting board into paying for them and besides the town clerk told me he never told the fellow to charge the road petitions to the town. (Manus manum lavat) exactly what he charged about the David Cochran and W. S Booth deal. If the town should pay for road petition blanks, why not for chattel mortgage blanks, deeds, and all the different kind of blanks that the town clerk may use to draw up papers? Why not furnish to justices of the peace all the blanks they need! What is the difference?

And so the rejecting of this claim is what riled the animal. He is short just so much. It might help him out on a Sunday morning, when he is sneaking around the back door of a saloon to get his customary dram. But dont despair, Igi, we have an election next fall again, if it ain't Bill King it may be some one else that you may do some ligitimate (?) work for, but dont do it any less than $500.00, in the meantime keep your stink battery agoing.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

WASHINGTON, Jan. 22.—The Democratic national convention today issued the following call:

C., has appointed Tuesday, the 21st day of June, 1892, as the time and chosen the city of Chicago as the place for holding the national Democratic convention. WOMAN'S GREATEST CHARM.

In what lies a woman's greatest charm?
To-day you think in her face it lies
And smiles at you from her lips and eyes;
To-morrow it shows in her rounded arm,
A form in symmetry complete,
A well turned ankle and shapely feet:
In her graceful neck and her shoulder' pose,
Her dimpled chin or her cheeks' red rose;
For in the inventory of her graces,
Her phisical beauty must ever have place,
And even where care has left its traces
'Tis the magnet still in a woman's face.
This to our eyes familiar grown,
We find a charm in her voice's tone,
In the soul that shines from her beaming eye
And her loving heart's warm sympathy.
There are potent charms in a modest mien,
A placid brow and a look serene,
In a manner gentle and refined
And a pure and cultivated mind:
In the pity that seeks to aid distress,
But her greatest charm is her womanliness,
And of every other it forms a part—
Of face and of form and of mind and heart.
As the perfume is to the blooming flower
So womanliness to a woman is;
'Tis nature's richest and rarest dower
As a man knows manliness is his.
It irradiates from her presence fair
As the flower's sweet odor fills the air;
Imparts a softness to speech and mien
And lends to her weakness a strength serene;
'Tis the light that shines from the soul within
And the proof of her heavenly origin.
All other charms do but enhance
This one of womanliness;
It dwells in her form, her air, her glance
And even in her rustling dress.
Her charms of figure and face allure
This holds the captive they make secure.

R. Q. MILLS, of Texas, has been elected United States Senator from the Lone Star State.

GROVER CLEVELAND'S chances for a nomination for President seem to be growing better as the time approaches for the convention. He represents the ideas of Democracy on the one great issue on which the contest is to be waged this year and is the best man to put at the head of the ticket to satisfy the voters of the entire country. He is the most popular man in the United States today on account of his views and his fearless manner of expressing them. There are other men as capable and who would make as good a president but they are not so well known.

Political Outlook.

In looking over the political chess board of this country, I find every man in his place, and getting ready to move. Every ism and opinion is clamoring for a recognition in the political arena and it would take the brains of a Jewish sanhedrum to tell what the outcome of all these things will be. This country is building or rather laying its prosperity or destruction upon a money foundation which if continued the nation's gods can never save (money gods) I forsee the next election may terminate as it did in 1824 when there were four candidates in the field, Clay, Crawford, Adams and Jackson. Clay recieved 37 electoral votes, Crawford 41, Adams 84 and Jackson 99. This threw it into the House of Representatives and according to law Clay, being lowest on the list, had to withdraw and he withdrew in favor of Adams, which elected him President, making Jackson a political enemy to both Clay and Adams.

In 1832 there were three Presidential candidates in the field, Pierce, Scott and Hale. Pierce recieved 254 electoral votes, Scott 42 and Hale none. Pierce was elected President. In 1860 there were four candidates in the field Lincoln, Douglas, Breckinridge and Bell. Lincoln recieved 180 electoral votes, Douglas 12, Breckinridge 72 and Bell 39, Lincoln being elected President.

My imagination leads me to believe there will be four Presidential candidates in the field next fall, Republican, Democrat, Prohibition and Alliance or People's party. The Republican party will have for campaign capital their war record, high protection and purity of the ballot. The Democrat party will advocate Jeffersonian principles, law protection and free coinage of silver and remind the people of their revolutionary fame. The People's party or Alliance will have for campaign doctrine, a turning over of railroads, telegraphs and telephones to the government, a revision of the tariff and other side issues. The Prohibitionists will have for campaign fuel a moral and reform doctrine and an unconditional prohibition of the liquor traffic. All these different issues will come up before the people during the coming campaign. Men will read and argue and think over the matter and yet many will vote undecided.

It was thought when the smoke of the Rebellion had cleared away and slavery was no more, that this nation had purified itself. Not so, it will take more than an emancipation proclamation or the 14th amendment to the constitution of the United States to make this country what it should be. Even the 15th amendment with all of its ignorance thrown into the ballot box did not seem to help us any. Now we have many live issues forced upon our law makers which they are compelled to recognize and among them the liquor traffic seems to be at the head. During the last quarter of a century while the people slumbered and slept this liquor traffic has become a Leviathen and now the country can not seem to get rid of it. Wars are always demoralizing and the late rebellion proved so to this country. The love of making money has a firm hold on the people of this country. During and after the war the opportunities for making money was too great, and that is one reason why we have so much whisky today. It is the money that is in it that makes it so hard to remove. We think if the voting population of this country could be fed on lobelia for a while it might produce an emetic that would purify the country. High protection and liquor license will never save this country. Think the people must have a change of heart.

Many are trying to make the people believe that our silver dollar is worth only 70 cents but it goes for full face just the same and is a legal tender for all debts, both public and private in no limited amount.

JOHN H. MCGARY.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

GENERAL REMARKS

The German settlement which had been made during the previous year in Medina, extended into Independence in 1856, locating about Lake Sarah; the names of those settlers being: Theodore Gaspar, John Loch, Nicholas Reifenburger and family, John Reifenburger and family, Hilarius Schumacher, John Weidenbach, the latter was the pioneer of the Weidenbachs in Independence, preceeding the arrival of the family by two years when his father, Michael Weidenbach and the rest came, other members of the family were: Adolph, who had just completed a term of service as a hussar in the German army previous to his arrival in Independence, Matthew, Michael, Mrs. Peter Schumer, deceased, Lucy, (now Mrs. Jacobs) Gertrude, (now Mrs. Wagner) and Mary (now Mrs. Jordan).

Settlers of 1857, and accompanying incidents, were: Jacob Batdorf and family, of which John, William, Barton Batdorf, and Mrs. R. M. Mills were members, Wm. Mills and family, Mrs. Wm. Mills was also a daughter of Jacob Batdorf, Charles Goodsell, now of Howard, and family, of which George and Warren Goodsell and Mrs. Miller, now of the State of Washington were members, also the following Germans: Nicholas Georgan, Joseph Klers, Laurens Ahrens located with their countrymen near Lake Sarah.

Amongst settlers coming to Independence in 1857 were Hon. Joseph Crooker, of Maine, who previously had been a member of the Legislature of the State of Maine, serving during the same session and in the same body of which Hannibal Hamlin was a member. His sons, Orrin B. Crooker and family and Edward, now deceased, located with him in the town of Independence. Orrin B. Crooker had previously owned a store in Perkinsville which he traded to one Wm. Lewis for a claim on Pioneer Creek, where in the meantime his father had also secured a claim. Rev. Joseph H. Crooker, now a talented Unitarian minister of Madison, Wisconsin was a son of Orrin B. Crooker, and spent his childhood and recieved his early education in the town of Independence. The Crooker family lived where Peter Soley now resides.

In 1857 a mail route was established over the Minneapolis and Watertown road, on which a post office was established in Independence, with Irvin Shrewsbury as P. M., the P. O. was located at his residence in section 26, and was named Maple Plain. That P. O. has existed ever since, passing through several locations and the successive control of several postmasters and finally taking its location at, and giving its name to the prosperous village of Maple Plain.

In the spring of 1858 the settlement of the north part of the town, especially the family of Thomas Astrope were thrown into sorrow by the death of the latter's son John Astrope, who was drowned in Lake Sarah, which calamity occurred by the unfortunate and his brother Henry attempting to catch fish by using dugout canoes as the ice was going out, and the one occupied by John sank leaving him to struggle to keep on the surface of the watsr from which situation his brother tried to extricate him by means of his fish pole, which was the only available means at hand, cramp having siezed him in the meantime he was unable to grasp the fishpole, and instantly sank to perish in the chilly waters of the season.

PERKINSVILLE.

During the year 1856, John B. and Needham T. Perkins commenced the townsite or village of Perkinsville on the southerly shore of Lake Independence. The Perkins brothers set up a steam saw mill and opened a merchandising business, which during that year, and years following proved to be a matter of much convenience to settlers, in the way of furnishing lumber, enabling the latter to improve their habitations and obtain many of the necessaries of life. Valorious Chilson was an 1855 settler of Medina, who on his arrival became interested in the contemplated townsite scheme of the Perkins brothers and became a resident of the village at the beginning of its existence. Additional settlers came in and constructed dwellings of lumber manufactured there from the stately lind, elm and oak timber growing near by and soon Perkinsville became a neat hamlet overlooking Lake Independence: the scene impressing the wanderer as he approached the place from the dense forest, as being picturesque. The road then known as the Monticello and St. Peter road was then surveyed through Perkinsville by George B. Wright in November 1856. That survey passed through the townsite of Hassen on Crow river, and running south to Lake Independence, circling around the easterly shore of that Lake to Perkinsville, and from the latter place it ran west of south and intersected the Excelsior and Greenwood road near E. B. Sutherland's, following the latter to Excelsior. A plat and survey of Perkinsville was in the meantime made by R. J. Mendenhall which was signed by John B. and Needham T. Perkins as proprietors and made matter of record in June, 1857. The townsite of Perkinsville comprised a body of 140 acres of land lying on the southerly shore of Lake Independence and on the line of the towns of Medina and Independence, extending into both towns, and is now the property of Dr. Fargo and H. A. Loverin. In 1857, Orrin B. Crooker came to Perkinsville and opened a store, which during the same year he exchanged for a claim on Pioneer Creek.

ROCKFORD.

To all appearances winter is still with us. Although the opening of March was very pleasant we have experienced some rough weather for the past two weeks.

Wheat is still falling and it is hard to tell when it will strike bottom. It is 4 or 5 cents lower than the same time last year.

OF all the tongues talked or written on earth no one is now more desirable or useful than the English. It is spreading everywhere; it is even probable that within a few years it will become the common language of Japan. In the first eighty years of this century the speakers of French increased in civilized countries from 31,000,000 to 48,000,000; of German, from 30,000,000 to 69,000,000, and of English, from 21,000,000 to 100,000,000.

A MAN in Chicago who possessed a solitary five-dollar bill and wanted to blow it in badly, hit upon a novel plan the other day by which to save and spend it both. The bill was given him by a friend, and he was determined not to part with it. After a lengthy debate with himself he evolved the brilliant scheme of pawning the note. He paid a visit to his uncle, raised $4.62 on the bill, and spent it according to his tastes. When further funds came in he redeemed the original note.

MR. W. B. SOMERVILLE, superintendent of the press service of the Western Union Telegraph Company, says that ten years ago there were only about fifty papers that had special correspondents and received special dispatches in the United States. The total number of words of service for a year at that time was about 28,000,000. For the last year of record special dispatches were sent to over 500 papers in the United States and the aggregate number of words so delivered was 260,000,000.

A STRANGE, weird story comes from London to the effect that in a conversation about his Bradenburg speech, when asked as to Russia, Emperor William said: "I will pulverize Russia." By diplomatic methods the remark was carried to the czar, who sent back word: "Tell your emperor that when he wants to begin pulverizing I will throw half a million men across the frontier with the greatest pleasure." Both these monarchs appear willing to engage in the "pulverizing" business.

AND now it is reported that the match trust has gone to pieces. The difficulty with trusts is that they are formed to fix high prices and big profits. As soon as the big profits begin to accrue an outsider establishes a factory on account of the inducements which the business extends. Then the trusts have to buy up the outsider or reduce prices so as to crush him out. So it goes on until buying up outsiders or reducing prices makes the trust a too heavy or an unprofitable load. Hence it is dropped. The supreme law of human selfishness and greed is fatal to trusts.

SINCE the double chloride of gold treatment has been shown to be so efficacious in the cure of alcoholism, would it not be an admirable thing for some astute chemist to devote himself to the search for a very effective hypodermic treatment of that grievous disease, demigogism? In some respects demagogism is worse than alcoholism because it befuddles the average human understanding more hopelessly and taxes the people just as much. Let us experiment with the chlorides and see if some specific cannot be obtained to cure this most disgusting and mischievous malady.

LATER.

Unconstitutional.

MADISON, Wis., March 22.—The supreme court to-day declared the assembly, senatorial and congressional apportionment made by the last legislature to be unconstitutional. The decision was unanimous. The last legislature in passing the law apportioning the state, in some cases ignored county and ward lines. The court held that section 4, article 4, of the constitution, ordains that assembly diftricts shall be "bounded by county, precinct, town or ward lines." The term "precinct" has ceased to be significant. The above provision makes the county the primary territorial unit of representation in the assembly and prohibits the dismemberment of counties in the formation of assembly districts, hence no assembly district can lawfully be formed which includes territory in two or more counties, unless the whole of such counties are included therein, so that the district is bounded entirely by county lines. A constitutional assembly district cannot be formed which includes within its limits fractions of two or more counties, or one county and a fraction of another county, for in either case the integrity of county lines would be violated, and a county dismembered. Chapter 482, Laws of 1891, attempts thus to dismember about twenty counties.

FRIGHTFUL EXPLOSIONS.

Boilers Burst at East Jordan, Mich., and Near St. Louis—Seven Men Killed in the Former Instance and Four in the Latter.

CHARLEVOIX, Mich., March 22.—A terrible explosion took place at East Jordan, this county, at an early hour Monday morning. The big mill of the East Jordan Lumber Company was torn to atoms, six men were instantly killed and several fatally injured by the explosion of the boilers. The mill had been running but ten minutes when there was an awful shock and the roof and all but one end of the mill was rent asunder. The inside of the big building is a complete wreck. The noise of the explosion was heard at this place, 14 miles distant, and several carloads of people and a physician started at once for the scene of the accident.

The six men who were killed outright or died in a few minutes were: Arbutus Cook, Will Beach, Simon Carney, J. C. Brown, Peter Sheldon and Manney Hunt. A. Christy, the head sawyer, who was stationed directly over the boiler, was horribly mangled and has since died.

S. Pearson, who ran the engine and was only a few feet from Christy, escaped uninjured. The engineer who has charge of both mills was James Carter. He had gone to breakfast, leaving the fireman, John Ringle, in charge. Ringle was in the engine room at the moment of the explosion and is dangerously injured, too badly to be interviewed as to the cause of the explosion. The other badly injured men are James Smith, Sandy Rainhart and Charles Brown, all of whom are in a critical condition.

It is impossible to say what caused the explosion. Pearson, the only man in the mill who came out unhurt, says it was probably due to low water or too high pressure. A boilermaker from this place did some repairs on the boiler last week and it is said that he told the proprietors that he was not satisfied with the job, but owing to the peculiar situation could not get at the work to fix it as he desired. Several men were working in the yard and the smokestack fell on the horse of one teamster, smashing the cart and killing the horse. The mill was valued at $10,000, partially insured, and will be rebuilt.

ST. LOUIS, March 22.—As the result of the explosion of a boiler at the works of the Laclede Fire-Brick Manufacturing Company, Manchester road near Sublette avenue, in Cheltenham, a St. Louis suburb, at 2:45 o'clock Monday afternoon four men are lying dead, two are fatally injured and two more seriously hurt.

The dead are: Larry Bussey, aged 23, married, of 1432 Billon avenue, crushed to death; Reynold Diedoke, aged 43, married, 1316 Graham avenue, thrown 100 feet into the air; Joseph Beckley, aged 19, single, 5730 Columbia avenue, thrown 100 feet in the air and crushed to death; Joseph Dubuchy, aged 45, married, Brandon avenue, thrown 100 feet into the air.

The wounded are: Frank Seeger, aged 90, of 1329 Pierce avenue, fatally scalded; Morgan Inman, aged 23, single, Sulphur avenue, piece of iron blown into the skull, also hurt about the face and body, will die; James Summerfield, aged 50, married, 5417 Wilson avenue, badly cut about the face, head, neck and body, will recover; John Pellel, aged 40, Morganford road, slightly bruised and injured internally.

Several other men were shaken and cut, but not badly. The boiler exploding was one of a battery of six, which, it is supposed, ran out of water, was suddenly supplied with cold water and the explosion followed. The boiler house was completely wrecked, the five uninjured boilers being unsealed and piled in a heap.

Beckley, Dubuchy and Diedoke were at work on the boiler-house putting up a whistle at the time of the explosion. Beckley and Dubuchy were blown high in the air, while Diedoke's body was found on the third floor of the clay-mixing building, having fallen from so great a height as to break a hole in the roof, passing through to the floor below. Every bone in his body was broken and the head and face crushed beyond recognition.

Dubuchy, who was assistant engineer, was blown high in the air. He fell on the roof of the generating house, a quivering, trembling mass. Beckley landed on the roof of the main building, also horribly crushed. All three of these men were undoubtedly blown at least 100 feet in the air.

Bussey was found in the ruins of the boiler house, crushed between the unsealed boilers. He lived a few minutes after he was found, but never spoke. All of the dead were so horribly scalded that the flesh peeled off wherever touched. The wounded men were at work in the immediate vicinity of the exploded boiler and were wounded by flying debris, by the steam and by the force of the explosion itself, which hurled them 100 feet away, one, Inman, being blown across the river Des Peres. The pecuniary loss to the company is from $20,000 to $25,000.

Big Figures Before the House—The Hennepin Canal Project Given a Small Allowance.

WASHINGTON, March 22.—The river and harbor bill, over which the house committee has been struggling for the last three months, was finally made public Monday afternoon. An exact total of the bill has not been struck, but Chairman Blanchard estimated it in round numbers at $20,000,000.

The most important feature of the bill to Illinois is the black eye which the Hennepin canal project receives. It is so hard a blow that the big canal will be seriously crippled if not permanently destroyed. Capt. Marshall warned the secretary of war in a report some time ago that at the present rate of appropriations—$550,000 once in two years—it would take twenty-eight years to complete this canal, before the termination of which much additional money would be required to maintain the work previously done from going to destruction. He added that even at the rate of appropriation proposed, $1,700,000, it would take eight years to complete the work. Notwithstanding this warning the committee has failed to appropriate the $1,700,000 asked for and has allowed only $500,000.

The deep-waterway project, which affects no one locality in particular but is regarded as of great importance to the commerce of the entire lakes, is favorably reported, although the amount in the bill is only $400,000, instead of $3,000,000 asked for. But the projectors are quite satisfied with this, for they say that as long as the federal government once approves the plan it will have to be carried out. The item, as it appears in the bill, is as follows, "For a ship channel 21 feet in depth and of a minimum width of 200 feet in the shallows of the connecting waters of the great lakes between Chicago, Duluth and Buffalo, $400,000." A proviso is that the secretary of war may proceed to make contracts for securing the deep waterways on a scale of costs not to exceed in the aggregate $2,840,000, exclusive of the $400,000 now proposed to be appropriated in the present bill.

BAIL FOR "BOODLERS."

Seven Chicago Aldermen Held in Bonds of $10,000 Each to Answer Charges of Conspiracy to Commit a Felony.

CHICAGO, March 22.—Late Monday afternoon indictments were returned by the grand jury against the following aldermen: W. J. O'Brien, D. R. O'Brien, Nicholas A. Cremer, Patrick J. Gorman, Philip Jackson, Stephen M. Gosselin and John F. Dorman. The charge against W. J. O'Brien is bribery, and against the others the specification is conspiracy to do an unlawful act.

Capiases were at once issued for the indicted aldermen and deputy sheriffs were sent out to hunt them up. Before court adjourned all had been brought in except Aldermen Gosselin and Gorman. The former was arrested in the council chamber Monday evening. The arrested men were required to give bonds in the sum of $10,000 each. The amount in each case was furnished.

Alderman Gorman, it is believed, has decamped, as all efforts to find him have proved unavailing. He was around the criminal court building while the grand jury was in session and displayed extreme nervousness, leaving the building hurriedly when the jury reported. All the indicted men except Alderman Gorman were in attendance at the regular meeting of the council Monday evening, but took no part in the proceedings.

Alderman Roth has made a statement to the public which discloses the fact that the leading newspapers of the city are behind the prosecution and that it was to assist them in exposing the corruption among the city fathers that he accepted money for his votes on the "boodle" ordinances.

YIELDS TO THE KAISER.

Caprivi Will Remain Chancellor—The Berlin Crisis Adjusted by a Compromise—William's Health in a Dangerous Condition.

BERLIN, March 22.—The cabinet crisis has been practically settled by Gen. Caprivi consenting to remain chancellor of the German empire on condition that he be relieved of the duties of minister-president of the kingdom of Prussia, and by the acceptance of the resignation of Count Zedlitz and Trnetzschler as Prussian minister for ecclesiastical affairs and public instruction. This solution has been brought about by the intervention of ex-Empress Frederick, who appealed to Caprivi to accede to the kaiser's request to remain at his post.

This appeal is said to have been based mainly on the condition of the kaiser's health and the fact that he was in no condition to face a strain that a change in the chancellorship would involve.

The resignation of Count Zedlitz has been accepted. This was unavoidable. The resignations of Caprivi and Zedlitz leave Dr. Miquel as the controlling spirit of the cabinet, and current report associates his name with the premiership, although other names are also mentioned. The kaiser thinks Miquel indispensable as a financier, and should he be appointed premier, he would probably remain in virtual, if not actual, direction of the financial policy of Prussia.

CHILDREN BURNED TO DEATH.

Five Lives Lost in a Fire Near the Village of Springfield, Minn.

SLEEPY EYE, Minn., March 22.—News of a terrible disaster 6 miles south of Springfield reached here late Sunday night. The house of a man named Leahy took fire and five children fell victims to the flames. The father was severely scorched, probably fatally. He was pulled out by a boy 14 years old. Only one inmate escaped unhurt. He woke up, ran from the house and returned and dragged his father out. The mother was absent from home at the time. The father had just returned from the east.

LYNCHERS WERE INSANE.

The Men Who Participated in the Hanging of Seibolt Escape the Halter.

DARLINGTON, Wis., March 22.—W. E. Carter closed the case for the state in the lynchers' trial Monday. At 9:30 a verdict was brought in, finding the defendants all insane at the time of the commission of the acts charged in the indictment and therefore not guilty. John T. Meighan, Alonzo Taylor and Hezekiah Andrews were declared insane now and ordered to report this morning. They will probably be sent to the insane asylum at Mendota. The remaining defendants were discharged.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

Caused a Sensation.

If a mine had been sprung under St. Anthony hill no greater shock would been occasioned to the residents there than the announcement that a suit had been brought against Dr. Henry F. Hoyt, health commissioner of St. Paul, for $25,000, for the alienation of the affections of Mrs. Lizzie McClellan. The complaint was filed by the husband, James M. McClellan, and later in the day depositions in the case were taken before Judge Hall. The doctor denies the charge.

St. Barnabas Gets It.

A decision was announced by the supreme court affecting the ownership of $250,000 worth of Minneapolis property. Richard Martin, of Red Hook, N. Y., made a trust deed and will. He owned considerable Minneapolis property valued now at $250,000. This was to go to St. Barnabas hospital under certain conditions; otherwise St. Luke's, of New York, would get it. The heirs took the side of St. Luke's, but the court gave it to St. Barnabas'.

Accidentally Killed.

Roy Buswell, 16 years of age, son of Charles Buswell, living 5 miles southeast of the town of Warren, was killed instantly by being struck on the back of the head with a piece of a circular saw which burst while being driven at a high rate of speed. Willard Wilbur was struck at the same time by a piece of the saw frame but not seriously hurt. The saw burst in several pieces and the escape of the rest of the crew was miraculous.

The Rochester Fair.

At a meeting in Rochester of the directors of the Southern Minnesota Fair association it was decided to hold a midsummer trotting meeting July 4, 5 and 6. It was decided to offer guaranteed stakes of $300 for 2-year, 3-year, and 4-year-old trotters, nominations to close April 15. Also to offer $700 guaranteed stakes for 3:35 and 2:28 trotters and 2:24 class pacers, nominations to close April 11.

More Land for Settlers.

There is no longer doubt as to the opening of the Sisseton reservation on April 15. Soldiers, sailors and marines may file a declaration and have a claim reserved for six months at a cost of $2 fees, and the land may also be commuted at $2.50 per acre. United States Special Allotting Agent H. S. Morris says that in his opinion all the land will be taken within a week after the opening.

Journalists Blackball a Negro.

The presentation for membership of the name of John Quincy Adams, editor of the organ of the Minnesota negro population, the Western Appeal, and one of the most prominent colored men in the northwest, threw the St. Paul Press club into hysterics. A strong fight was made for his admission, but of the 125 members ten cast black balls and he was rejected.

A Promising Situation.

[New York Daily Investigator.]

Good judges say that one of the next localities to achieve distinction by jumping from a substantial town to a thriving metropolis in a few years will be the city of Superior, Wisconsin, and this, too, without the effort and struggle through which Interior towns have passed, while effecting the same result. Until a year or two ago the average man did not stop to think that Superior as a monopolist of the water and rail termini at one end of the lakes is in the same position as Buffalo at the other end. Figures are uninteresting unless given briefly, but comparisons are always important. This little Superior, credited by its last census with only 23,000 people, handled more coal last year than did Chicago; of grain, it shipped nineteen million bushels; of flour, sixteen hundred thousand barrels; of wool, four million pounds; of merchandise, to the value of thirteen million dollars. Of all lake cities this business was second only to Chicago in magnitude. There is an economical reason for this condition of things. It is that the rail rate on freight sent west of Lake Michigan is one cent per ton per mile, while the water rate is one-tenth of one cent per ton per mile. This position at the extreme western end of Lake Superior is what gives the city of Superior its prestige, and is making it grow faster than Chicago ever did. Besides one hundred and one smaller industrial concerns, Superior has located twenty-eight large manufacturing enterprises in the past eighteen months, including the American Steel Barge Company, the builders of the famous "whaleback" vessel, which is revolutionizing the lake and ocean freight carrying trade. The twenty eight institutions above mentioned, include iron and steel plants, flour mills, stove foundries, wagon factories, pump makers, shipbuilders and saw and shingle mills. The most conservative business men in the Northwest believe that Superior will grow faster in the next ten years than any other city in that prosperous section of the country, and many of them claim that Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Milwaukee have never seen the rapid growth that will come to the head of the great chain of lakes and the city of Superior.

'TWAS on the first of April that my lady came to earth,
And all the April fays and sprites assembled at her birth.
With pink of fragrant appie blossoms they tinted cheek and chin,
And hue of purple violets her eyes they prisoned in,
And yellow of the crocus brought to shine among her curls,
And sunny smiles they gave to her, and tears like purest pearls.
Nor did they wit withhold, oh! no, few girls are bright as she—
But I'll confess that she has made an April fool of me.

If she command me stay, I stay; if go I, straightway go;
If she decree that night is day, I swear that it is so—
Frowns she, my heart sinks in my breast; smiles she, I fain would dance,
And whether skies be fair or dark depends upon her glance—
And though she may neglect me quite, some other swain to bless
With her delightsome company, in feigned unconsciousness
Of my discomfiture, small blame finds her perversity,
For I'll confess that she has made an April fool of me.

But if—'t is rarely—I rebel, and vow no more I'll bear
These April moods this April maid so oft sees fit to wear,
Scarce is my farewell spoken, when a penitent appears,
The silken fringe that veils her eyes all gemmed with April tears,
And then—and then—(what lover, pray, relentless could remain?)
I kneel for pardon, and take up the cap and bells again,
Content, if near her I may live, whate'er she wills to be,
For I'll confess that she has made an April fool of me.

"IT STRIKES me," said Jim McArthur, vainly trying to catch a glimpse of the small of his back, "that these jokes are senseless."

"But they are funny," said Mart Harper, slyly pinning a strip of yellow calico to Tommy Bowers' coat-tails.

"I doubt it," replied Jim, stoutly. "I can't scare up the least bit of a smile when Squire Burgess looks up and down the street in response to our 'Hello!' and for the life of me I can't see what there is funny in ringing door-bells or tying dead cats to garden gates. It is simply annoying to the other people, and the mischief of it is than any one of us could be victimized the same way by the biggest idiot in town. For instance, Mart has just pinned a rag on Tom's coat, and doesn't know that there is one on his own coat."

"The deuce there is!" cried Mart, feeling behind him, with a very red face.

"I dare say," continued Jim, the philosopher, declining to join in the general snicker at Mart's expense, "that there is something hanging or sticking to me at this present moment, but I don't care enough to look for it."

"Oh, ho!" cried Lew Anderson, the fourth of the group of idle boys who were standing this first day of April on the main street of Bosco, a small town in the Michigan peninsula, "what is King Jim's idea of a joke, for instance? Shall we blow up a barn with dynamite, or throw a couple of children in the lake? I would suggest that we set fire to the lake as a starter."

There was a general roar of merriment over this sally, but Jim was not abashed. He was king, indeed, among the Bosco boys, by virtue of superior strength, wit and intelligence, and he knew that no serious revolt against his rule was contemplated.

"Pooh!" he said, with a smile. "You don't grasp my idea. I think we four boys ought to distinguish ourselves by doing something out of the common run—something we can talk about next year with pride."

"I catch on," said Mart, with more force than elegance. "Suppose we send somebody up to Wandel, forty miles, for Dr. Bixby to mend a broken leg, and when he comes, give him the leg of a chair."

"Very well," said Jim, dryly. "Dr. Bixby is a violent man, and was a boxer in his younger days. You go."

Mart very naturally demurred, and while the others were trying to think of something else, Jim said, suddenly:

"We are in big luck. Here's our chance!"

"What's the matter?" queried the boys, in whispered chorus.

"Keep quiet, and you'll see directly. Tom, give me that specimen from Hunter's mine. Quick!"

Tom passed over a specimen of copper ore almost as large as his fist and fully eighty per cent. fine, and, as Jim took it in his hand, a long, lank and ungainly fellow came shambling around the post office corner.

The boys knew him well as a Vermont man named Bascomb, who had been loafing around Bosco for three weeks, and was generally understood to be much keener than he looked.

As he came up Jim held the specimen off at arm's length, as if examining it critically, and when he came within earshot Jim cried:

"It must be a mistake, Tom. It couldn't have cropped out there."

By this time Bascomb was abreast of the group, and the boys were watching Jim in surprise, wondering what in the world he was up to.

Suddenly Jim appeared to see Bascomb for the first time.

"Mr. Bascomb," said he, with an affectation of diffidence, "you're a good judge of copper, aren't you?"

"Not very," answered Bascomb, his weak and watery eyes shifting uneasily. "I can tell it when I see it—that's about all."

"Pshaw!" exclaimed Jim, in a vexed tone. "Then you can't throw any light on this argument. This chunk," he went on rapidly, "was picked up on the very top of that hill yonder—the one with the blasted pine at its base. I say it must have been dropped there, and that it came from the Houghton district, and Tom here declares that it cropped out on the hill. But it's no matter so long as you can't tell the difference. Come along, boys."

The boys followed him in mute bewilderment, and when they got around the corner were amazed to see their leader kink up with laughter.

"What's the joke?" asked Mart, with a puzzled look. "Does anyone see the point?"

"What is Bascomb doing?" asked Jim, without answering the general query.

"Standing with his hands in his pockets," answered Anderson, after taking a careful peep. "Is that the joke?"

"No," said Jim, after indulging in another kink; "the joke will come in about an hour, when you'll see Bascomb rooting away with pick and shovel on the top of Fox hill. Didn't you see the cunning gleam in his eye when I put the chunk under his nose? Well, I did; and if he isn't on the hill inside of an hour, it will be because he can't buy, beg or borrow the tools."

The boys saw the joke and roared. Everybody in Bosco knew that Fox hill had been thoroughly prospected, and that there wasn't an ounce of ore in it, and when they saw the Yankee climbing the hill, sure enough, they fairly whooped. It was such a good joke that they told the old folks, and they enjoyed it, too.

Glazer, the storekeeper, vowed he would set off some fireworks in Bascomb's honor, and four or five choice spirits, who regulated the affairs of the nation by sitting on Glazer's barrels and boxes, and consuming tobacco for nine hours a day, made preparations to give the foolish prospector a calathumpian serenade.

And, what is more to the purpose, they did. When Bascomb came down from Fox hill at nightfall he looked woebegone and fagged out, and he tried to sneak into the hotel through the back door, but the boys were there to welcome him.

He took it good-naturedly enough when he found he couldn't escape. The boys plied him with questions about how many veins he had struck, and how much he would sell out for; and of course he couldn't do anything but grin sheepishly and try to look as if he didn't mind their chaff.

Then the landlord gave him a dig about his expedition, and the girls who waited on the table had something to say, and when he rashly ventured out after supper the statesmen from Glazer's surrounded him with tin horns and tin pans and other instruments of torture, until he was forced to turn and fly back to the hotel.

Then they kept it up outside until the landlord himself got tired and threatened to scald them if they did not go away.

Next day the boys were not surprised to hear that Bascomb had left town without bidding anyone good-by, and for a whole week the boys didn't get over laughing at the Yankee who was too smart; and it was unanimously voted that Jim McArthur was a genius, as well as a philosopher.

Not one of the boys ever expected to see Bascomb again, and consequently they stared as if they had encountered a ghost, when, precisely three weeks afterward they saw the lanky gentleman walking along the main street, hands in pockets as usual. He was in company with two well-dressed strangers, and the boys were surprised to see the trio strike for Fox's hill.

"MR. BASCOMB, YOU'RE A GOOD JUDGE OF COPPER."

Next day two more stranger's came to town, and they went to Fox's hill; and the next day the whole pack went away.

The following week Bascomb came back with carpenters and builders and a carload of machinery, and the boys began to think they were dreaming.

The statesmen at Glazer's store woke up about this time, and began to neglect the affairs of the nation in watching Bascomb and his men.

Jim McArthur had not very long to wait to find out the why and wherefore of these mysterious movements. His father sent for him, and said:

"So you are the boy who fooled Bascomb, are you? I just heard to-day that you were the one who conceived that great April fool joke. You ought to be proud of its success."

"Why?" stammered Jim.

"Because," explained his father, with a grim smile, "you put the fellow on to the biggest vein of copper that has ever been found in this region. It is fifteen inches thick, if it's one!"

"What!" cried Jim, in amazement. "He never said a word—he never told—I thought—"

"Of course, of course," said Jim's father. "He let you fool boys think you had fooled him, and he just slipped down to Detroit, bought the whole hill for a song, formed a company, and now he can sell out his share for a hundred thousand to-morrow. But he won't; he'll hold on, and he'll be a millionaire in five years."

Then Jim went out, called the boys together in caucus, and they then and there resolved that they had played the most expensive April fool joke on record.—Victor Valentine, in Golden Days.

"REAL HUMOR."

But Then It Did Not Seem to Be Duly Appreciated.

"Can I stay here and sleep on a lounge to-night?" asked a sad-faced young man as he walked into the Press club last evening and joined a group of reporters. "I've got to, anyway, whether I can or not. I'm a victim of the boomerang April-fool joke. It started in like this: I was just getting my comfortable second nap this morning when a call came on my door and the voice of the landlady notified me that the postman was below with a registered letter for which I must give a receipt in person. Had I been good and awake I would not have been caught by such a transparent joke, but I was just stupid enough to hustle into a portion of my clothes and tramp downstairs, where everybody hailed me with that old chestnut about 'April fool.'

"I went back to my room, sore in spirit, and kept thinking of a plan to get even all through the day. By afternoon I had the thing all fixed up and proceeded to work out my plan. I went home between five and six and took occasion to mope about for a little while, making all the folks see me and notice my glumness. I was the very embodiment of woe and would only respond in monosyllables. Then I went to my room, took off my coat and vest and put a streak of red ghastly grease paint across my neck resembling a slash with a razor. In addition to this I put a red spot on my shirt front, and then, grasping a razor in my left hand—the blade clotted with imitation blood—and a revolver in my right, I fired two blank cartridges, let a wail out of me, staggered and fell with a thud to the floor. There I lay, with the revolver firmly grasped in my right hand and the razor in my left.

"In a second I heard feminine screams and pattering footsteps on the stairs. Then the landlady and two or three married women and the servants broke into my room, saw my blood-stained corpse stretched out on the floor, and set up an assortment of shrieks which made the pictures turn face to the wall. Then I heard some moans and a woman flopped to the floor in a faint. More moans and another flopped. The landlady and her sister came to me and bent over me with horrified exclamations, and the first thing I knew the sister let loose a little wail and fell across my stomach. In about a second the landlady herself sunk in a heap with an arm thrown across my neck, whereupon the servant girls turned and fled with shrieks.

"I dragged myself from beneath the forms of my sympathizers and sat up. It was a beautiful sight. Four women dumped down on the floor regardless of appearances, some of them with their noses puncturing the carpet and some tied in knots. I threw a glassful of water in each woman's face, and lit a cigarette and watched 'em come to. They opened their eyes about the same time, and pretty soon sat up and looked about 'em. I watched their faces, and when I saw that they had about got their bearings I blithely remarked: 'April fool' and rubbed the red grease paint off my neck with a towel. Just then the servant girls returned with a policeman and came charging upstairs. I happened to know him and gave him a wink, and told him it was a mistake; that one of the boys had worked a little April-fool joke on the folks, and he went away. But the women turned in and abused me scandalous, and the landlady ordered me out of the house at once. To escape their wrath I fled, and when I sneaked back after supper found my trunk on the doorstep with a note tacked to it ordering me not to try to enter on pain of being murdered in my bed.

"That's why I'm here. When will the American people learn to appreciate real humor? That's what I want to know."—Chicago Mail.

THE APRIL FOOLS.

The April fools! the April fools!
What happy folk are they!
The white flowers deck the cherry boughs,
And daffodils are gay.
The bluebird calls, the redbreast sings,
The blackbird pipes all day,
And they believe—the silly things—
That birds and flowers will stay.
'Tis wind and frost and scorching skies
That make the April fools grow wise!

The April fools! the April fools!
What happy folk are they!
They're light of head and light of heart,
And dance the hours away!
Young love, with fluttering purple wings,
Blithe hope for them is new:
And they believe—the trustful things—
That all they say is true!
Sweet simpletons! but who would frown
And shake their air-built castles down?
For dark were life, and full of sighs,
Should all its April fools grow wise.

—Orange Cakes: A plain cake, to bake in two layers. One cupful of sugar, one egg, one-half cupful of milk, one and one-half cupfuls of flour, one and one-half teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one tablespoonful of butter; use orange flavoring.—Good Housekeeping.

—The very smart young woman given to letter writing uses a dark green paper, upon which gold sealing-wax holds the envelope together. Johnstone-Bennett uses the faintest shade of mauve satin paper, and has the wax, which is firmly and evenly placed, of exactly the same color. By using this, Jane is ahead of all the others in having the latest Parisian fancy.

—The order of washing dishes is of some importance. Glass should be taken first, then silver, then china. If there is a specially choice dish, search it out, wash and wipe it by itself, and immediately set it away, that the chances of breakage may be reduced to a minimum. After the dishes are done carefully scald, rinse and dry dishcloth and towels. If they can be dried in the open air so much the better.

—Oysters on the Half-Shell: Blue Points are the best for serving uncooked. Allow six for each person. In cities they are sent home prepared for the table. If this must be done at home wash and brush the shells carefully; take off the upper shell, loosen the oyster from the lower one and allow it to remain there. Have the oysters ready on the plates, with a bit of lemon in the center, when the guests sit down.—

—Frost in Eggs and Apples: An egg expands when it is frozen and breaks its shell. Apples contract so much that a full barrel will shrink until the top layer is a foot below the chimb. When the frost is drawn out the apples assume their normal size and fill up the barrel again. Some varieties are not appreciably injured by being frozen, if the frost is drawn out gradually. Apples will carry safely in a refrigerator car, while the mercury is registering twenty degrees below zero. Potatoes, being so largely composed of water, are easily frozen; once touched by frost they are ruined.—Christian Inquirer.

NEW SILKS AND CHALLIES.

How to Tell Them from Left-Over Goods —Some Beautiful Patterns.

It is cold comfort to read of the beauty of the new China silks, but they and the challies are already in the market, and the interest of the shopper centers round the counters where they are displayed. The distinctive novelty of the new silks which invariably distinguishes them from those left over from last season is the chameleon effects in the silk and in the figures. A black Japanese twill, which is rather superseding the plain silks in favor, in that it is newer and richer, is sprinkled with pale lavender orchids, which as it turns in the salesman's hands change to the dull crimson so often seen in this flower. A rose-figured black silk changes as by magic to a silk of a different hue as it is manipulated in the sun. A beautiful bit of woven, glimmering moonlight is a faint rose when you look at it one way, and a pale lavender in another light, and has a delicate pattern of white bow knots running all over it.

Another feature of the new silks is that the ground of the flowered kinds are diversified with satin stripes before being sprinkled with flowers. A black silk of this kind has broad, black satin stripes alternating with plain stripes of equal widths, and has a bold Marie Antoinette pattern of pale yellow ribbon tied in bow knots at intervals around sprays of deeper yellow and bronze chrysanthemums. The new patterns, while bold in design, are not detached, but are connected by running vines or wandering ribbons. Many of the large patterns are made up of fine flowers arranged in clusters and vines. The ground is often well covered between the large figures, with smaller flower sprays. Jardiniere effects of many colors, all delicate, like the Dresden tints, promise to be well worn in the white and light silk. In color the silks are more pronounced, vivid greens, strong old pinks, and old blues and yellows all being found in frequent repetition in the backgrounds.

The silks in greatest favor just now are the striped moire antiques. The silk is usually white or light and in very delicate moire effects, and is striped with one or more colors. Very pretty rainbow stripes of many tints are also very effective. The favorite trimming of these gowns is chiffon of the color seen in the bright stripes of the material. The waist is sometimes made entirely of the chiffon or mousseline de soie in a plain color, the skirt cut entirely on the cross and edged with ruffles like the waist. A handsomely-jeweled or jetted corselet and the ubiquitous bow at the back finish the gay gowns which these silks are designed for. The old-fashioned poult de soie is returning to favor in new colors. Pekin antique, seeded bengaline, and Velasquez lace patterned are all worn, and a handsome heavily-corded silk, under the name of cotele, is much used, particularly in combinations with cloth.

In thinner materials printed and embroidered chiffons, spangled gauzes, and mousseline de soie are safe purchases by the bargain hunter, who will soon find these materials much reduced, preparatory to receiving new stock. Brocaded crepe du chine is still a favorite material, and is used in stronger colors than last year, including very decided shades of olive, light green, yellows, shell pinks and pale blue. Crepons come usually in self colors—beige, tan and gray. The favorite decoration for these, as well as for everything else cloth, velvet and silk, is the popular coarse meshed lace known as point de gene, which suggests old Mechlin in tint and mesh.—N. Y. Sun.

Fashionable Cruelty to Animals.

It is a sharp comment on our semi-civilization that it was necessary in the city of New York to found a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals; but the necessity of the society is constantly illustrated in the treatment of horses. Their helpless dependence, their faithful service, their patient endurance were not enough to save them from the maltreatment of those who delight to describe themselves as a little lower than angels. We were forced to make laws to protect animals from man's inhumanity.—Harper's Magazine.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

His residence with most of the contents were consumed. Charley Hitz says the insurance was $350 which he expects up on this morning's train.

—At a caucus of the Democratic voters of the town of Franklin, at the city hall, on Thursday afternoon, Wm. Ziebarth was chosen chairman and Ennis E. Brandon secretary. Danforth and J. C Hitz.

—On Sunday evening Rev. Davies took for his text "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world." —1 John, chap. IV, v. 1. An able and interesting sermon was listened to by a large and appreciative audience. The preacher said that the thing most needed in the world is not, as some would think, wealth, nor is it education, invention or law; each, in its place, good. But the one thing most needed is a true, genuine spirit of God in the heart. He does not believe in Universalism, Unitarianism nor Spiritualism. The choir adds much to the interest of the meetings.

County Cullings.

The school board of Delano are suspending a small boy from the public school until his father pays for some damage done to a heater, which is a thing they have no right to do.—Buffalo Journal.

The Eagle, this week assumes a defensive attitude and having set up one of Dave Cochran's old bulls, as a shield, fires her mud balls at the heads of the ex-chairman and ex-clerk of the town. She claims that they, as well as Dave Cochran are politically dead. Some eagles like dead things.

In a letter to the Buffalo Journal, A. G. Sexton, well known as an old resident of Wright county claims to have been cured of an appetite for alcohol by Dr. Tyson's Vegetable Treatment, at St. Anthony's Hospital, Minneapolis. Good for Al, his many friends will be pleased to have him remain cured.

The Democratic convention for nominating delegates to attend the State convention at St. Paul, on the 31st inst., which will send delegates to the National convention to nominate a President and Vice President meets tomorrow, at Buffalo. Delegates be on hand prepared to send men you can rely on to vote for delegates to Chicago that will do the best thing while they are there.

The old fight has broken out again. Without any cause or provocation the Eagle renewed its attacks upon Mr. Ziebarth a couple of weeks ago after the town election and in last week's GAZETTE, Mr. Ziebarth gives out some facts in reference to township blanks, that seem to account for the Eagle's hostile attitude. At all events the Eagle's attack seemed to be uncalled for and Mr. Ziebarth strikes back in a decidedly damaging way. Buffalo Journal.

The Waverly Tribune complains that our lines,

"Where, O, where would be,
The Honorable A. Y. E.?"

are "halting and rasp like a file." We suspect it is not so much the roughness of the lines, as the subject, that causes the auricular appendages of the editor to tingle and which reminds him of a naturalist, (possibly Emin Pasha, of "Darkest Africa"), who found a fly in the molasses and wondered how it got there.

Our subject, neither rich, nor rare,
Very evidently got there!
As for the mode, and the manner,
Just enquire of Brother Tanner.

Below will be found a list of Jurymen drawn on the 19th inst., in Clerk of Court O'Leary's office, at Buffalo, and who will assemble on June 6th, at the county seat, to deliberate on and decide the knotty questions that may be brought before them. This is a responsible position in which to be placed. Every man should endeavor to discharge his obligation in a fearless and impartial manner, as on his decission may hang the property, the reputation or possibly the life of his neighbor.

LITTLE POTUS,

Born—Lived—Died in the Criminal Classes.

BY JULIA MCNAIR WRIGHT.

IN THREE PARTS.

PART III.

DIED IN THE CRIMINAL CLASSES.

On the night when, without regret, Polly Potus found herself a widow, she had not sold wares enough from her basket to pay for a three or five cent lodging on the floor of a Water Street den. She wandered late and long with her little one in her arms. Sometimes she sat on a curbstone, or a doorstep or box to rest. Then the police came along.

"What are you doing here? If you do not go on I must arrest you."

"Oh, I'm goin' home," said Polly Potus, "Me an' the baby; only it's a long way, and I'm tired."

Then she got up and moved heavily on. The strength that liquor had given her had died away and left weakness behind it, and then it was a long way to go, for this mother of the criminal classes might walk the world over and yet find no home for "her and her baby." As she blundered along in the summer night she began to envy Potus, lying there dead and disfigured in the morgue. She fumbled in her pocket in vain hope that she might find a nickel to buy poison—real, true, druggist marked poison—for herself and the light-weight on her arm. She had no knife, not even a kerchief to hang herself on the first convenient beam. Only the river offered her a free road to death and she set off for that. She grew more and more tired, until seeing a convenient hogshead, she crawled into it, and so fell asleep.

A month later than this Mrs. Chance was sitting at tea. She lived by cleaning stores, market-stalls and the like. The work was rough and the wage was small, but she used no liquor, and had only herself to support. She now sat sipping a cup of "tie" tea, and eating a thick slice of bread and a red herring. As she thus took her ease in her own room, the door opened, and Polly Potus reeled in. She dropped in the lap of Mrs. Chance the bundle which she carried, and which proved, upon examination to be Little Potus. The woman spoke thickly: "There Chance, you was the first as ever handled him, and you'll be the last. He's gone and I brought him to you."

The child breathed—that was all.

"What has he eaten lately?" asked Mrs. Chance.

"Gin and sugar."

"And yesterday? The day before? For a week."

"Gin and sugar, or mayhap a drop of water from the fountain."

"And why have you not suckled him?"

"I've no milk, Chance. Mother's milk don't come without food, and I've had only gin. I couldn't get both and I couldn't do without gin. He won't trouble you long and I won't at all."

She went out, leaving the child stretched on Mrs. Chance's knees. Mrs. Chance had human feelings. She unrolled this poor bundle, and considering that, alive or dead, he should be clean she gave him a good washing, the first he had had since she washed him at his birth. As his tatters were unfit to put on a clean skin, she burnt them, and pinned him up in a crash towel. As yet he lived she poured some warm milk down his throat. Next day, as she could not afford to buy of a regular milkman, and doubted the efficacy of chalk and water she bought cornmeal and brown sugar and so fed the child. She also begged some clothing for him. Little Potus began to thrive. Mrs. Chance took some interest in his progress and expected every day to see its mother, and restore her child.

After a month Mrs. Chance carried her protege abroad for an evening airing, and out of curiosity stepped into the morgue. There on a board, just as she had been drawn from the river, lay Polly Potus. The corpse was dark and swollen; the eyes stared; the mouth was wide open. The spectacle was horrible. The babe was now able to notice things; he looked; he thought the sight funny; he held out his hand; he laughed.

No one but she who carried it knew that his mirth was roused by his dead mother.

Mrs. Chance took care of Little Potus for a few weeks more. He had grown strong and noisy. He wanted to crawl all about, and roared lustily if he were left alone. Mrs. Chance could not leave her work; she could not take the child with her; she could not pay ten cents a day to a day nursery. Her neighbors asked her why she—old, poor, with an almshouse closing in her horizon—should encumber herself with other people's children? Why indeed! Mrs. Chance thought she had better give the baby to those who could provide for him. The Government had licensed, and fostered, the Distillery of Potus I; the whole-sale Liquor-Store of Potus II; the Retail-Liquor-Store of Potus III; let the Government take charge of Potus IV, last relic of a family fallen from respectability into the criminal classes. She saved herself trouble by carrying Little Potus one night and laying him at the gate of the almshouse.

Potus I died at 80; Potus II at 58; Potus III at 39. Let us look at Potus IV at 22.

Potus IV was lying in a cellar on straw, as at the moment of his birth. A doctor stood beside him.

"Doctor," said Potus "There is but one thing for me. To go as my mother did—by suicide."

"Potus, what comes after death?" asked the doctor.

"Eternity," said Potus, with a sigh.

"But eternity, good or evil according to the deeds done in the body—and it is written, 'No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of Heaven.'"

"Repentance is hid from my eyes—not by God, but by the works of men. I live, not to do better, but to do worse. Hell, doctor, can be no worse horror than I suffer now. When a creature lies in filth, want, pain, desertion, haunted by fiends, forsaken of friends surrounded by vile blaspheming beings like himself, his present agony, his future one long despair—what is left for him?"

The doctor shook his head. He had other creatures as needy as Potus needing his aid. He went out.

Potus roused himself a little; he shook his fist. "A curse!" he cried, "the curse of the lost, on a land that might save her perishing children, and will not! a tenfold curse on a cruel country, that might have saved me and mine, and would not, and sold us soul and body for naught, and doth not increase her wealth by the price!"

He lay as long as he could in his stifling den, and then crawled out upon the sidewalk. There was a knawing pain in his vitals. Food might check his anguish. He held out a wavering hand for alms. None gave. DRUNKARD was written on every line of him. Rum might still his pain. He went to the dealers. They had gotten his all, had consummated his ruin, but they only mocked him now that he asked their aid.

O for one glass, to steady his nerves, to send a glow into his numb extremeties, to clear his brain, and take away this awful inward knawing! He begged, he supplicated piteously for one glass of gin. But now he had not one penny to pay. He was evidently a dying man. The dealers all feared he might die on their premises, and furnish a new item for the hue and cry of the Temperance Party. One and all shut their doors upon him; they drove him forth with scorn, curses, blows. One flung him forth so fiercely that he fell, and lay for a time, bloody and stunned. The bitter tragedy of his mother's last days began to be repeated in him. He wandered about the streets; he went down to the river and looked at the black flood, wishing it would take him in, but he had not energy enough to cast himself into the water. He stumbled along the crowded streets, wishing vans would knock him down and crush him as they had his father. But fate had this irony for him she denied him even the boon of dying. When he was too weak to walk and stopped awhile, the police drove him on roughly. They saw in him the drunkard. They did not see the dying wretch, needing in his last hour the consolations of religeon and philanthroy.

Potus had a dull instinctive horror of a prison and as he was rebuked for delaying, he dragged himself along. He did not know that death was drawing near; he felt only added misery, exhaustion and despair, and thought they would accompany him indefinately. Wearily he dragged back to his cellar, as a sick beast goes to his den to die.

As he came near, two children were on the sidewalk together—ragged, unkempt, fierce, unchildlike scions of the criminal classes—and one five-year-old flew at the other with an old razor that he had picked up heaven knows where. The sight of this weapon gave Potus an idea, and with it a flash of resolve. He seized the steel from the child and drew it across his own skinny throat. The jagged wound gaped. The blood jutted forth. Potus fell dead. People ran together. They lifted Potus up. The doctor was among them. Blood had been shed. At whose hand should it be demanded? Of Potus? Was the child of the criminal classes responsible for this?

The doctor took the dead body up. AT WHOSE DOOR DID HE LAY IT DOWN?

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, March. 18, 1892.

"Mr. Blaine's alleged illness" said an anti-Harrison republican of national prominence, "is at this time nothing but an attack of the "sulks" brought on by his disgust for his superior in office. He was sick, for a day or two but he would long ago have resumed his duties if he had not become offended at the high handed manner in which Mr. Harrison took hold of the Behring Sea business and made a mess of it, so to speak, which he has not improved by taking the very unusual course of requesting the British minister to ask Lord Salisbury to hurry up his answer to the note of protest sent to him the other day. Notwithstanding my belief that most political prognostications are rot of the worst sort, I will venture to make one and that is that as soon as Mr. Blaine can settle in his own mind upon the man to beat Harrison out of the nomination he will resign from the cabinet and throw all of his influence to that man.

It will not be the fault of the democrats if Arizona and New Mexico are not admited to the Union at this session of Congress. Bills for the admission of both of them have been favorably reported to the house and will certainly be passed.

Representative Fithian's bill for the free admission to American registry of ships built in foregin countries after Jan. 1, 1893 will be favorably reported to the house.

The sub-committee to investigate the World's Fair expenditures have decided to go to Chicago instead of bringing the witness to Washington, and they will start as soon as the vote on the free coinage bill is taken next week.

The democrats on the House Postoffice commitee have authorized Mr. Enloe to report favorable to the house his bill repeating the mail subsidy act of the billion dollar Congress. Mr. Enloe's report which has been presented to the house argues that the law if carried out for the ten years provided for, will cause the goverment to pay out $3,500,000 per year, more than would be required for the same service if the law were repealed in other words this law will give away that amount each year.

It has been steadily apparent during the last few days of the debate on the free wool bill that a vote could not be taken up on it as early as the 31 inst., as was the original purpose, without preventing numerous members delivering speeches which have been carefully prepared, so the majority of the committee on ways and means have decided not to press a vote upon the bill, which will be temporarily laid aside when the silver bill is taken up, next week. The free wool bill will again have the right of way as soon as the silver bill is disposed of, and it is now hoped and expected that Mr. Springer will be well enough to deliver the closing speech on it. He has devoted much time to acquiring knowledge on the subject.

Housekeepers who have to pay the increased price for Venezula coffee, which the merchants will be compelled to ask by reason of Mr. Harrison's proclamamation placing a duty of 3 cents a pound thereon, because Venezula has declined entering into a reciprocity agreement with the United States will be able to judge from personal experience of the benefits we are getting from the reciprocity clause of the McKinley tariff law.

Representative Dockery of Missouri says the tariff scheme so far as it relates to agriculture is fallacious, misleading and unavailing to assist the farmers in lifting the mortgages which now encumber the farms of the great west and that the reciprocity scheme which proposes to disregard the natural laws of trade and to regulate commerce and correspondence between State departments, will also prove fallacious. He says that reciprocity, in order to be of genuine avail to the agriculturist must not be restricted to the meager and insufficient markets of South America, but must be enlarged in its scope, so that the farmer may have opportunity to make profitable exchange in any market in the world.

ARE YOU GOING?

20,000,000, visitors, at least, are expected at the Columbian Exposition; and whether you expect to be one of them or not, as an American, naturally you are interested in the preparations for the grand event. A splendid paper in DEMOREST'S FAMILY MAGAZINE for April, "The Evolution of a Great Exposition," is the best thing of the kind that has yet been published. From it you may learn all the interesting points about the coming World's Fair, and the illustrations are simply superb, including a comprehensive view and the plan of the grounds, pictures of all the magnificent buildings, and portraits some of the leading officers having it in charge. "A Talk about Trees and Arbor Day" is a timely and deeply interesting paper, profusely illustrated with pictures of the favorite trees planted in different sections of the United States, so accurately delineated that each may be easily recognized when met with; "German without a Master" furnishes invaluable suggestions for the study of that useful language: "The International Order of the King's Daughters and Sons," a paper by the General Secretary of the Central Council, Mrs. Mary Lowe Dickinson, gives facts and incidents most charmingly interwoven; "A Snap Shot at Washington Etiquette" furnishes an insight of the rules that govern society at our national capital; "Easter Legends and Customs" is specially interesting, and Easter Novelties" furnishes suggestions for all the Easter gifts one may want to make. Besides, there are splendid stories, every department is full of good things, and there are over 200 handsome illustrations; and every month's magazine is just as good, and the subscription price is only $2. a year. HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

Fusions.

Now as election time draws near we hear quite a considerable talk about fusions. In our State for three decades it has been expected, that, whenever a man had his name placed before the people as a candidate for office on the Republican ticket he would, without further ado, receive the office on election day. Things for a few years past have been a little more dubious. Great dissatisfaction has sprung up in the ranks and even among the leaders in the once powerful party, and the nominees instead of having a sure thing when nominatod have been kept in a constant dread and fear of defeat until election day. Two years since several of the offices actually slipped from the grasp of the party in power. And the legislature, wont to do the bidding of the protective-tariff-high-license party, was so constituted as to be beyond the control of its former dictators. These great innovations, it seems to us, have been brought about by people becoming awakened to the evils of these two assistants of monopoly building coupled with the disgust occasioned by the methods openly charged upon some of the most successful of the politicians of the party who had so long controled the government of the State. The old party has cried out year after year to the old soldiers and their decendants not to forsake the old party but to stand firmly up for what they and their fathers fought. This sounded well and was a keynote which found a responsive chord in many a patriotic breast. Today after studying the questions before the voters of the United States of America, one of the grandest nations under the sun; after deliberating on and thinking about the questions of today and comparing them with those that existed when the Republican party sprung into power people have become convinced that the Republican party of today is not that of '61 and are fast leaving its ranks, for one cause or another, until several of the recent strongholds have given majorities against the present policies and methods of the G. O. P. The Alliance, the Prohibition, the People's and other parties detract from its ranks. Most of these parties are in their incipiency and not yet settled upon any firm basis. Their foundations are as shifting sands and as the late grand convention at St. Louis showed to the world they cannot coallesce, cannot come together and hold their strength for any one party among themselves. Some of our Democratic friends evidently more anxious to have their enemies defeated, by whatever means than to derive any benefit for their own party principles, principles they have claimed for years to believe in, are now advocating the surrendering up of party principles and fusing with parties holding these yet uncrystalized views on the great subjects before the people, claiming that they will, thereby gain a little advantage, at least and see their enemy discomfited. Would it not be better generalship to hoist the banner of Democracy high and stand solidly for the grand old principles?

Democratic State Convention.

SOLID FOR CLEVELAND

And Tariff Reform.

The Democratic State Convention held in St. Paul on Thursday was well attended being one of the largest ever held and was enthusiastic enough to suit the redhottest Cleveland man in the country. Many white locks grown gray in the ranks were seen here and there mingled with the smooth faced young gent with the cute little moustache casting his first ballot. All were deeply in earnest about sending delegates to Chicago who would represent Minnesota Democrats by standing by Grover Cleveland whose portrait, wreathed in flags and flowers formed the frontiepiece to the stage decorations, so long as there was a chance for his nomination. A. E. Haven, editor of the Faribault Democrat, was chairman and Well E. McKenzie, of the Crookston Times, secretary and I. G. Donnelly of St. Paul, assistant secretary of the meeting. WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, March. 31, 1892.

Jingoism has again taken possession of Mr Harrison, and it is said, although the wording of the communication is carefully witheld, that he has sent a very saucy note to Lord Salisbury, demanding an immediate and specific answer as to whether he proposes to renew the modus vivendi, his last communication, received this week, not being at all satisfactory. Some of Mr. Harrison's friends call this last communication an ultimatum, but it's dimes to straws that Mr. Harrison did not intend that Lord Salisbury should put that construction upon it. There is no occasion for the sending of an ultimatum. Nearly a year ago this Government was notified that Great Britain would not renew the modus vivendi this season, and yet it now pretends to feel great indignation because Lord Salisbury declines to change his mind. Let Mr. Harrison quietly order a sufficient naval force to Behrings Sea to maintain the rights we claim. Britain will not interfere, simply because it is none of her business; but if he continues to try to stir up the people needlessly he will find himself deserted even by his party.

Has Secretary Blaine resigned? He has been well enough to take a long walk, such as no sick man would have undertaken, this week; but he has not been to the State department, nor was Lord Salisbury's dispatch or Mr. Harrison's answer thereto submitted to him before they were sent to the Senate. This has an odd look; and besides, an official stated today that Mr. Harrison had not called on Mr. Blaine at all during his sickness, although his house is just across the street from the White House.

Senator Chandler brought out by questioning Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Nettleton in regard to his connection with the expenditures at Ellis Island, the Government immigrant station, the astounding fact that the man who has been acting Secretary of the Treasury during the absence of Secretary Foster knows nothing whatever about the business of that department, but depends entirely upon a clerk of the department, who has been detailed to act as his private secretary, for the information upon which his official acts are based. In other words, whenever Gen. Nettleton has been acting Secretary of the Treasury, the busines of that great department has been completly in the hands of a clerk. If the clerk in question knows enough to be trusted with such enormous reeponsibility, he should be made Assistant Secretary, in order that he might draw a salary commensurate with his knowledge, and something else should be found for Gen. Nettleton, if it is absolutely necessary that he should be taken care of.

Senator Cullom, who is basing his hopes of getting the Presidential nomination of his party almost entirely on his facial resemblance to Lincoln, is said to be trying to get Col. W. W. Dudley to undertake the management of his boom and its barrel attatchment.

Senatar Turpie of Indiana, made a personal explanation in the Senate this week denying in toto the recent statement of Judge Woods concerning him, and also denying that friendly personal relations existed between Judge Woods and himself.

No man ever promoted from the House to the senate was more generally or enthusiastically congratulated by his colleagues in the House and colleagues-to-be in the Senate, than has Senator Mills been this week. Mr. Mills will not resign his seat in the House until he has voted for the free wool bill. Then he will enjoy the unique distinction of voting twice upon each of the greatest questions before this Congress—the tariff and silver—once in the House and once in the senate.

The Senate has passed a bill appropriating $18,750,000 for the improvement on the Mississippi River, not more than $3,750,000 to be spent in any single year.

The House Judiciary Committee has decided that it would be injudicious for the the House to pass Representative Enloe's bill for the protection of witnesses in government employ who may testify before Congressional investigating committees to irregularities existing in the Government departments, because of their being a doubt of its constitutionality.

The Republican leaders are greatly disappointed at their failure to get any campaign material out of the debate on the Bland free coinage bill, which they vainly tried to make a partisan measure of Members of both parties were represented on both sides of the debate, and it was the same when the vote was taken. Members voted as their constituents desired them to, without regard to politics.

HISTORICAL FACTS.

Pioneer Days In The Region North of Lake Minnetonka.

Written for the BUFFALO GAZETTE, by HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

INDEPENDENCE—1855-6.

The following parties, whose names have not as yet been presented, were 1855 settlers of Independence, namely: James Wilson, B. Barnhart and Thomas Thornton, their locations being near Job Moffat's and Pioneer Creek, and Frank Sutton was first an 1855 settler of Independence, locating on the west line of town, his claim including lands within the towns of Independence and Franklin and in 1855 he changed his residence to that part of his land lying in Franklin, Wright Co. He has been a resident of Wright county ever since. John E. Cathcart was an 1855 settler of Independence. His location being in the section 6. He had two children, a son and daughter; the son becoming a superintendent of Schools in some county in one of the northwestern states and the daughter a missionary to some distant island. Mrs. Jackson, of Maple Plain, whose first husband was Robert Stinson, came with him to Indepeneence in 1855. Their children being Frank Stinson and Mrs. McIntyre, of Maple Plain.

In regard to religious work it may be stated that the Rev. George Galpin, Methodist, and brother of Rev. Charles Galpin, was associated with the Rev. J. J. Camp in the pioneer operations of the Methodist denomination in Crow River Valley, holding services in Independence, Greenwood and other localities.

Daniel McGary, father of John R. McGary, and grandfather of John H. McGary, came to Independence in 1856 taking a claim adjoining that of his son. He was a soldier of the war of 1812, serving under General Wm. H. Harrison and also other commanders of that war. He often narrated that he experienced hard service near Fort Meigs in one disastrous movement of Gen. Harrison's army, 800 men, under Colonel Dudley, who was sent out from the fort with orders from General Harrison to spike a cannon and destroy ammunition of the enemy and to return to the fort without delay. The order was obeyed with the exception of the last part. Colonel Dudley delayed and was surprised by a large body of British and Indians and as this old veteran reported, it proved to be a merciless slaughter, only about one fourth of Colonel Dudley's men escaped to the fort. Daniel McGary was a nephew of Col. Hugh McGary a celebrated Indian fighter in the early days of Kentucky. Daniel McGary died in Missouri in 1858. Maj. James Whitehead was an 1856 settler in section 22. He served afterwards as Indian Agent at Leech Lake. —— Boynton and John Wilcutt and families were 1856 settlers. Zimri and Christopher Willcutt were sons of the latter.

WAYZATA-1855-6-7.

Early in 1855 L. C. Walker became associated with O. E. Garrison in the enterprises inaugurated by the latter at Wayzata. The signatures of both these parties are appended to the certificate of dedication of the plat of Wayzata filed in May, 1855, Walker becoming in the meantime owner of a large portion of the townsite and of a considerable interest in the steam saw mill commenced by Garrison. The following parties whose names have not as yet appeared became residents of Wayzata early in 1855, namely: O. B. Matteson, Franklin N. Fleming and James H. Clark, some of these parties becoming in the meantime associated with the early settlement of Orono. A. K. Richards, now of Independence was an 1855 settler of Wayzata and also Thomas Keesling of Indiana.

The steam saw mill of Garrison and Walker during the process of its erection, afforded considerable employment during 1855 to the new settlers and was the indirect cause of many finding locations; the report of the existence of such an enterprise attracting people to Wayzata and who, on their arrival became sufficiently interested to locate in the vicinity, and on its being put into operation was of material benefit to the settlers in the way of furnishing lumber.

Towards the close of the year 1855, O. E. Garrison disposed of his remaining interest in the townsite and saw mill to L. C. Walker and abandoned the place. The sawmill was operated at Wayzata till the latter part of 1856 when it was removed to a townsite on the northwesterly shore of Parker Lake known on the records as Plymouth the sawmill being rebuilt on the shore of the lake but never operated there; and it may be further remarked that the townsite of Plymouth always remained a site, the town never materialized.

The merchandising carried on by O. E. Garrison at Wayzata during 1854-5 was a secondary affair to his other enterprises, intended more as a matter of convenience to the new settlers and employees about the saw mill and townsite, than a pecuniary benefit to himself, this small establishment saving the expense and inconvenience of obtaining supplies from St. Anthony's Falls. This business was closed in 1855. Other stores were opened in the village at different times during that year, none of which were very extensive and with one exception none continued beyond a period of a few months. The owners of these establishments being James B. Brown, Wallace Hatter and Thomas Keesling. James B. Brown on pre-empting his claim on Brown's Bay, opened and operated his store in Wayzata which, after a few months, he disposed of and removed to Hollywood, Carver county. Wallace Hatter on pre-empting his claim on Long Lake opened his store, and after a brief experience in merchandising in Wayzata, disposed of his establishment and left the country. Thomas Keesling's enterprise was longer lived than the others. His operations continuing through 1856 into 1857, attended with success until after the removal of the saw mill and setting in of the financial crash of 1857, when the prospects of the little village were paralyzed, rendering merchandising impracticable, upon which Keesling disposed of his store and removed to Minneapolis.

During the fall of 1856 Benj. F. Keesling and wife came to Wayzata. The latter rented and operated for a time the hotel belonging to William Dudley. In 1857 he was followed by his brother-in-law, John Bronk. Thomas and B. F. Keesling were brothers.

The following parties were brought by their parents during their minority to Wayzata, in its early settlement namely: Rev. Henry B. Harrington, Mrs. Harrison Pendergast, dec'd, late of Collingwood, Meeker Co., and Frank M. Harrington, dec'd, member of Co. B, 9th Reg. Minn. Infantry, died Nov. 24, '64 from a wound received at the battle of Nashville, the children of Wm. B. Harrington; Oliver B., Walter and Joseph C. Brown, Mrs. Labelia Obert and Mrs. Mary Dillman, the children of James B. Brown; Ephriam and Quincy Harrinton, Mrs. Stimpson, Mrs. Ray, Mrs. Lyons and Mrs. Frank Braden, the children of J. S. Harrington; and George E. Day, Mrs. Robert Edgar, dec'd and Mrs. O. Dennis dec'd, the children of Abel W. Day.

THE Atchison Globe says the only way to win in an argument with a woman is to walk off when you have stated your side of it.

INDIA will probably be the next country requiring deliverance from the pangs of hunger. She had an exportable surplus of 20,000,000 bushels of wheat, but has sent away over 52,000,000 bushels. And people are always on the verge of starvation in that overcrowded country.

IT is said that the old black overcoat of the German army will shortly be abolished. Experiments have been made with various regiments during the last twelve months with overcoats of various shades of gray, which have led to the conclusion that light gray is the color least distinguishable at a distance, and, therefore, best adapted for wear in view of the use of smokeless powder.

HERRMANN ZEITUNG, who makes his living by traveling in trunks and then exhibiting himself in variety shows on the continent, made his last trip from Antwerp to Christiania in a wooden box, which stood on the ship's deck four days and four nights without anybody's knowing that it contained a man. The voyage was stormy, but Zeitung kept his nose to a crack in the boards, ate his sandwiches and kept well.

IT is reported that the Palmers, one of the largest naval and shipping firms in the United Kingdom, are arranging to transfer their plant of works at Newcastle-on-Tyne to a certain port in the United States where they will conduct their business in future. Mr. Rockefeller, of the Standard Oil Company, will, it is said, join the enterprise, controlling $40,000,000 and using his influence to secure government contracts for warships.

THE female interest in woman suffrage seems to be on the down-hill grade in Boston. The total number of women on the poll lists this year as qualified to vote is only 1,589 as compared with 134,089 men. Last year number of women registered was 8,292, owing to the influence of a sectarian scrimmage. Now, however, that things have quieted down nearly 7,000 have decided they don't want to exercise the privilege of suffrage.

THE bacilian world will be more or less excited by the information that Dr. Rabener, of Roumania, has announced his ability to knock the everlasting wiggle out of them—that is, the influenza style of bacillus—by the use of creoline. The well known facility with which the bacillus adjusts himself to his environment and extracts sustenance from the most unpromising ingredients, will have a tendency to make people a little slow at first to buy creoline by the barrel with a view to its general consumption.

IN Russia a child ten years of age cannot go away from home to school without a passport. Servants and peasants cannot go away from where they live without a passport. A gentleman residing at St. Petersburg or Moscow cannot receive the visit of a friend who remains many hours without notifying the police of his arrival, as the case may be. The porters of all houses are compelled to make returns of the arrival and departure of strangers. And for every one of the above passports a charge is made of some kind.

IN the course of a lecture at New Haven, Conn., Rev. Thomas S. Dana, an educated Indian, made this singular statement: "The Indians never cook anything in the house. They always cook outside, giving as their only reason that if they cook inside the steam will collect in their clothing and draw the lightning. Whether this is truth or not I do not know, but I do know this: No Indian wigwam has been struck by lightning since the dawn of history, and no Indian has been killed with lightning for more than 100 years."

THE management of Yale college at New Haven, Conn., has decided that next fall all the post graduate courses, with the degree of "doctor of philosophy," will be open without distinction of sex. It is not the design to establish an annex or other rival of the colleges already existing for women, but to receive the graduates of those colleges and give them as good opportunities for the most advanced research and education as can be found in Europe. Yale is the first of the great universities of this country to make this change.

MEXICAN laborers while digging in the extension of the Santa Cruz canal came upon one of the strangest of the old Aztec cities. They struck the first ruin about twenty feet below the surface. Everything about the old building had been wonderfully preserved, owing to the alkali in the sand. The first building consisted of a triangular structure about three hundred feet in length and two hundred feet in width. The roof, which had doubtless been thatch, had caved in, but the wooden pieces by which it was held together were as sound as when put in thousands of years ago.

A YOUNG woman from Sweden has been looking for her sister, of whose whereabouts she knew nothing except that she was in the United States. Finally she drifted to Portland, Me., and in inquiring for this sister mentioned a name that sounded a little like Swift. So she was taken to the store of Mr. Swift, who, however, proved to be entirely ignorant of the girl's whereabouts. But while she was telling her story a man happened to be in the store who said that he had a Swedish servant girl who might possibly be able to help the inquirer. The servant girl proved to be the long-looked-for sister.

BY the death of Max Strakosch, which occurred at Fordham, N. Y., the musical world has lost one of the most alert, enterprising and honest of its impresarios. He was one of the most sanguine, genial and delightful of men, and his fund of good nature never was exhausted, not even during the last four years of his life, during which he suffered from paralysis. His nephew, Carl Strakosch, it will be remembered, married Clara Louise Kellogg. He himself, after remaining a bachelor many years, married Miss Nielson, a New York lady, by whom he had four children—two boys and two girls.

LATER.

Salisbury's Reply Acceptable.

WASHINGTON, March 28.—Lord Salisbury's last communication to the president stating the grounds upon which he would consent to renew the modus vivendi as to Behring sea was laid before the senate soon after it went into executive session to-day.

In transmitting the paper to the senate the president added to it a letter stating that Lord Salisbury's reply was very satisfactory to this government, and that it was preparing a suitable response. The character of this response was indicated briefly in the president's letter as being a substantial acceptance of Lord Salisbury's tender with a few modifications that could doubtless be arranged without difficulty.

One view put forth by a Western senator has won many adherents to the treaty. It was in substance that the United States had everything to gain and nothing to lose by the ratification of the treaty. Assuming the worst possible outcome of the arbitration—a decision against the United States on each or all the points submitted, it was argued that there still remained enough of value in the seventh article of the treaty to warrant its ratification. That article pledges Great Britain to co-operate with the United States in the protection of the seal fisheries under regulations to be formulated by the arbitrators. So that even damages to a considerable amount were assessed against the United States would receive in return the assurance that the value of the seal fisheries would be enhanced to a much larger amount through efficient international protection.

SWEPT BY STORMS.

Many Buildings Demolished by a Gale at Cerro Gordo, Ill.—Damage by Hail.

CERRO GORDO, Ill., March 28.—Ten buildings were completely wrecked by a cyclone Saturday afternoon and twenty others were more or less damaged. The cyclone was preceded by a terrible hailstorm which drove every one indoors, and to this may be attributed the fact that no one was killed or even seriously injured. It was a few minutes before 3 o'clock when the windstorm swept through the village from south to north and its path was marked by a strip of wrecked and ruined buildings 200 feet in width. The path of the storm passed west of the business portion, where most of the population was gathered. Those who saw the hurricane approach took to their cellars, the inhabitants of several of the houses dismantled thus escaping injury.

Among the buildings wrecked were the residences of J. Clarkson, William Bowen, B. Hyatt and Edward Edwards. They were lifted from the foundations, unroofed and twisted out of shape. Clarkson's house was crushed like an eggshell by a huge timber blown from a lumber yard 200 yards away. The family was away on a visit and thus escaped. At Mrs. Griswold's the kitchen was blown from the main body of the house and hurled to the top of a tree in the yard. The barns of Joseph Auten, A. Manicke, Rob Hudgen, W. H. Howells, G. Frantz, John Marsh and B. Wyne were completely demolished. So completely was the destruction of the last mentioned that not a board of it can be found. The homes of each of those above named were also badly damaged, as were a large number of other buildings. The only business building injured was the Shellabargers elevator. It did not receive the full force of the cyclone, but was unroofed and otherwise damaged. The total loss is estimated at $40,000, with but little insurance. No one was seriously injured.

TUSCOLA, Ill., March 28.—This vicinity was visited by a very heavy hailstorm Saturday, the equal of which has not been witnessed since 1863. Hail fell to a depth of 2 inches and of large size.

CELINA, O., March 28.—At 4:15 Saturday afternoon a hailstorm commenced through this section of country, lasting until 5 o'clock. The hail fell to the depth of several inches, and some stones were as large as hen's eggs. This is the most terrific hailstorm ever witnessed in this section of the state, and a great deal of damage was done to the growing crops of wheat.

BLOOMINGTON, Ind., March 28.—A cone-shaped cyclone skirted along the northwest edge of this city Saturday afternoon, unroofing a number of houses and the chair factory of Showers Bros. A number of girls working in the factory were deluged with rain after the roof was blown away and were badly frightened, but escaped with little injury. An old lady by the name of Martz was badly hurt when her house was blown down.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., March 28.—A baby tornado swept through the city Saturday afternoon, followed by a damaging hailstorm. Signs were dismantled, part of the scaffolding of the soldiers' monument was blown down and a multitude of windows were battered in.

LEBANON, Ind., March 28.—A terrific hailstorm was felt here Saturday afternoon. It lasted for twenty minutes, some of the icy balls being as large as hens' eggs. A great many windows and skylights were demolished.

DEATH OF PATRICK DINAN.

The Owner of the Famous White Horse Which Figured Prominently in the Cronin Tragedy Passes Away.

CHICAGO, March 28.—Patrick Dinan, the liveryman at No. 160 North Clark street from whom Detective Dan Coughlin hired the famous white horse which carried Dr. Cronin to the Carlson cottage, where he was murdered, died at his home at 2 o'clock Sunday morning.

It was chiefly through the evidence furnished by Dinan that Detective Coughlin was convicted. Coughlin the night of May 4, 1889, hired the white horse and buggy for a "friend." This friend called for Dr. Cronin and told the doctor that one of P. O'Sullivan's employes had been injured. Dr. Cronin was then driven to the Carleson cottage, where he was murdered.

PAIGE SURRENDERS.

The Cashier of the Painesville Bank Gives Himself Up.

CLEVELAND, O., March 28.—R. K. Paige, the cashier and virtual head of the wrecked Painesville bank, returned from New York at 1 o'clock Saturday and gave himself up to the sheriff of Cuyahoga county. He is now in the sheriff's custody awaiting an investigation of affairs in Painesville. It was supposed that Paige had gone to New York with the intention of embarking for Europe. President Horace Steele, who was arrested at his home in Painesville for having indorsed notes forged by Paige, was brought to Cleveland and held in custody until his friends could furnish bail, which was produced Saturday forenoon. The liabilities of the wrecked bank are now placed at $700,000, with assets of $200,000.

FATALLY HURT.

Two Young Ladies Struck by a Switch Engine at Evansville, Ind.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., March 28.—Lizzie Deinus and Mary Klinger, aged 16 and 19 years, were returning home from work Saturday night and attempted to cross the track in front of an approaching train. A switch engine coming from an opposite direction dashed down upon them. Miss Deinus had her head crushed and Miss Klinger had both legs cut off. Neither can survive. The engineer of the switch engine failed to see the girls until he was upon them.

Four with One Bullet.

DEMING, N. M., March 28.—A serious accident occurred between Potomas, Mex., and Deming, N. M., to a Mormon family Saturday. B. R. Young was driving along behind another wagon when a loaded gun in the front wagon fell and was discharged. The ball pierced Mr. Young's shoulder, then his son's hip, and then, passing through the baby, struck Mrs. Mary Roberts, daughter of Mr. Young. The bullet very seriously wounded the father and son, killed the baby instantly and severely wounded Mrs. Roberts.

WALT WHITMAN DEAD.

The "Good Gray Poet" Passes Away After Long Years of Suffering.

PHILADELPHIA, March 28.—After a protracted illness, lasting from December 17 last, when he was first afflicted with pneumonia, Walt Whitman, the poet and author, died at his home in Camden, N. J., at 6:45 o'clock Saturday. His taking off was peaceful. Shortly before his death he asked that he be moved. The nurse turned him on his side and in ten minutes he was dead. Five days ago a change was noted in his condition. He seemed to be fast losing vitality and did not care for nourishment. His respiration became rapid, and there were other things noticeable showing that the end was near. Artist Aitken will take a cast of the head for a statue. Whitman died poor, having only his residence, library and copyright as his worldly possessions.

In December last Mr. Whitman agreed with his attending physician to allow them to perform an autopsy upon him after his death. He did this in view of the number of remarkable illnesses which he had survived and in the interest of medical science. The autopsy disclosed the fact that the poet had died with his organs in a state of disease that should by all laws of medicine have killed him years ago. His left lung was entirely gone, while of the right there was but a breathing spot. The heart was surrounded by a large number of small abscesses, and about two and a half quarts of water. The pain in the left side, that had been diagnosed by some physicians as an internal cancer, was found to have been caused by peritonitis. The brain was found to be abnormally large and in a fairly healtay condition.

Walter Whitman was born at West Hills, Long Island, New York, May 31, 1819. His education was obtained at the public schools of Brooklyn and New York city, and, on leaving, he first learned the printers' trade, and subsequently carpentry. After teaching school he edited for a brief time newspapers in New Orleans and Huntington, making in the meantime extended pedestrian tours through the United States and Canada. During the civil war he volunteered as a nurse and was in the hospitals of Washington and Virginia. He was afterward a clerk at Washington. Since 1874 he has resided at Camden, N. J. He is the author of "Leaves of Grass," "Drum Taps," "Democratic Vistas," "Passage to India," "After All Not to Create Only," "As a Strong Bird on Pinions Free," "Two Rivulets" and "Specimen Way and Collect." His last publication was a volume of poems called "November Boughs," which appeared in the fall of 1888.

His books were first published in Boston, afterwards at Philadelphia, because the Massachusetts authorities objected to its sale in that state on the ground of immorality. Mr. Whitman's most marked peculiarity is his deviation from the usual poetic forms of rhythm and meter.

HIS ANSWER.

Reply of the British Premier to Assistant Secretary Wharton's Note of March 22.

LONDON, March 28.—Lord Salisbury, under date of March 26, has replied as follows to Sir Julian Pauncefote in response to Mr. Wharton's letter of March 22:

"In reply to your telegram of the 22d inst. notice has been given to owners of ships sailing for Behring sea that both agreements at present under discussion between Great Britain and the United States—that as to arbitration and that as to an intermediate arrangement—may affect the liberty of sealing in Behring sea. They have all, therefore, notice of their liability to possible interruption and will sail subject to that notice. The question of time is not, therefore, urgent.

"Inform the president that we concur in thinking that when the treaty has been ratified there will arise a new state of things. Until it is ratified our conduct is governed by the language of your note on the 18th of June, 1890. But when it is ratified each party must admit that contingent rights have become vested in the other, which both desire to protect. We think that the prohibition of sealing, if it stands alone, will be unjust to British sealers if the decision of the arbitrators should be adverse to the United States.

"We are, however, willing, when the treaty has been ratified, to agree to an arrangement similar to that of last year if the United States will consent that the arbitrators should, in the event of a decision adverse to the United States, assess the damages which the prohibition of sealing shall have inflicted on British sealers during the pendency of the arbitration and in the event of a decision adverse to Great Britain, should assess the damages which the limitation of slaughter shall, during the pendancy of arbitration, have inflicted on the United States or its lessees.

"As an alternative course we are also willing after the ratification of the treaty to prohibit sealing in the disputed waters, if vessels be excepted from prohibition which produce a certificate that they have given security for such damages as the arbitrators may assess in case of a decision adverse to Great Britain, the arbitrators to receive the necessary authority on that behalf. In this case a restriction of slaughter on the islands will not in point of equality be necessary. Her majesty's government is unable to see any other than one of the two methods of restricting seal hunting in the disputed waters during the arbitration which will be equitable to both parties."

SIX MEN DROWNED.

A Cross Current Capsizes a Boat Containing Eight Woodchoppers.

QUINCY, Ill., March 28.—Six colored men employed on the Illinois side of the river, opposite Canton, Mo., were drowned Saturday evening while crossing the river in a skiff. There were eight in the party, but two managed to save their lives by clinging to the boat. A cross current in the river capsized the boat. The drowned men were woodchoppers, named Marbie Shelton, Charles Bradshaw, Squire Hudrens, Dorris Belt, Hugh Tibels and Jake Gross.

EDITOR MUNFORD DEAD.

A Prominent Figure in the Democracy of Missouri Gone.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., March 28.—Dr. Morrison Munford, for over twenty years editor of the Kansas City Times, died at 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon of exhaustion resulting from a long illness. He was 49 years of age. He owned the Times from 1869 until last summer, when he lost control of it. He planned to start an evening paper, but was taken sick before the project ripened. Munford's fortune was once $2,000,000. He died worth only a few thousands.

Bloody Work.

WASHINGTON, Ind., March 28.—Adam Niedick, a German coal-miner, shot and killed his wife late Saturday afternoon. He then ran to a stable two squares distant from his house, where he shot himself to death. Niedick had been long married to the woman and they had grown children. The couple quarreled frequently and Niedick had often threatened to kill her. He went home Saturday afternoon intoxicated and carried out his threat. The murder occurred in a thickly populated part of the city, and officers were hot on the trail of the murderer before he committed suicide.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

Peculiar Accident.

Capt. D. Cavanaugh, of the firm of Cavanaugh & Co., met with a serious accident at Faribault. He put on a pair of gloves that had been used in handling machinery and had been soaked in gasoline to take out the oil. The decision is the outcome of a ruling recently made by the supreme court of the state regarding the ordinance.

Released After Fifteen Years.

Michael Lyons was a resident of Minneapolis in 1877. One day in June he came home drunk and ended up a row with his wife by killing her. Lyons was sentenced to the penitentiary for life. Motive for Her Suicide.

The corpse of Miss Flora Ingersoll, who committed suicide at Northfield some months ago, and which was taken to Dodge Center for burial, has been disinterred by the coroner at that place and found to be with child. This probably explains an act hitherto unaccountable.

Age and Youth United.

Lindsay Porter, a wealthy farmer living near Plainview, was married to Miss Eva Daniels, of Oneida county, N. Y. The groom is 70 years of age and the bride 28. Porter has been married before, and has children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren living.

THE MONARCH OF OLLA.

To the court of Olla, the Island of Ease,
Two wise men came one day,
On a geological journey bound,
With hammer and chisel, the wide world round,
They were visiting isle and continent,
And winning, wherever their steps they bent,
By explanation and argument
Their way.
But here, as soon as they went to work,
In Olla, the Island of Ease,
A personage, dignified, florid, and bland,
Came hurriedly out to them, hat in hand.
"The Monarch of Olla regrets," said he,
"This manifestation of industry,
Desires you to stop it immediately,
If you please.

"Objects to your chipping the royal rocks,
Dislikes scientific research,
Hard facts, and harsh noises, and hammers and such,
And doesn't like gray-headed men very much—
In short, your departure, good sirs, I suggest!"
And, bowing (his manners were quite of the best),
He left the two scholars, perplexed and distressed,
In the lurch.

"This Monarch of Olla, I hear," said one,
"Is only a child, forsooth!
Yet a sovereign child is a sovereign still,
And has, without doubt, a tyrannical will;
And how to deal with the infant mind
Is a difficult problem at best, I find,
To the clearest logic so hopelessly blind
Is youth."

Then down they sat in the sand to mourn
Their lost geological joys,
Till a fisher-maid, with a bright black eye,
Came strolling, listening, smiling by.
"Good sirs," said she, "may I make so bold?
The Monarch of Olla is eight years old,
And remarkably fond, I've often been told,
Of toys!"

They started, they smiled, they stroked their chins,
With a dignified, deep delight:
They telegraphed straight to the nearest town,
Where dwelt a toyman of much renown,
And ordered from him in the greatest haste
A whip with a handle silver-chased,
A ball with the costliest broidery traced,
And a kite

Of wonderful beauty and monstrous size,
Embossed in a rich design:
A banjo of gold with a tuneful twang,
And a golden gun with a patent "bang;"
A bicycle (safety) and trumpets and drums
(The noisiest each of its kind that comes),
And a number of tops with a number of hums
Very fine;

A train of cars that would run all day
At a genuine railway rate;
An army of men in a golden box,
And a trunkful of golden building-blocks—
In short, they ordered each possible toy
That is dear to the heart of the everyday boy,
Yet costly enough for a king to enjoy
In his state.

Then, bowing and breathless, they stood without
In an antercom neat as a pin,
While the messenger boys in an orderly corps
Went in with their gifts at the nursery door.
Five minutes they waited (it seemed a week),
Then rose on the silence an uproar unique—
A tempest of weeping and shriek upon shriek
From within.

And out at the door came the unlucky toys
In a shower that darkened the air:
And out from the palace in dire dismay
The wise men fled by the shortest way,
Nor paused until they reached the shore,
Where, all in a heap on the sandy floor,
The fisher-maid found them as once before,
In despair!

She heard their tale with a brow demure,
At first with a glance of wonder,
And then with a frown of grave surprise
That hid the laughter that lurked in her eyes.
"Nay, now!" she cried, "what a heart of stone
This ruler of eight years old must own!
Yet, hark you, sirs, you may still atone
For your blunder.

"A gift of my choosing (at your expense)
Will settle the matter with ease,
And win you, I'll warrant, the royal grace,
And the consequent love of the populace.
So hear you, sirs, it is not too late:
For a moderate sum you may mend your fate.
Five dollars will do it, or four ninety-eight,
If you please!"

They sighed and they doubted, but drew her a check
Quite double her modest demand:
And a day or two afterward stood once more
In the anteroom, at the nursery door,
While the fisher-maid, with a face of joy,
Sent in on his errand one messenger boy
With a single box and a single toy
In his hand.

Then lo! there was laughter and clapping of hands,
And a rustling of delicate frocks:
And then from the monarch's mysterious room
No warning there came of immediate doom,
But a gracious message of compliment,
And the Monarch of Olla's free consent
To chip away at their heart's content
At the rocks.

The wise men then looked at the fisher-maid;
She laughed with her lip a-curl.
"Next time," she cried, "before you begin,
'Twere well to consider whose grace you would win.
Sooth, wisdom and folly are like as two peas!
That box, learned sirs, held a doll, if you please,
For the Monarch of Olla, the Island of Ease,
Is a girl!"

THE GOVERNESS.

An Episode of a Winter Day's Journey.

BITTER February day. Not a pleasant day to travel in, by any means; but, then, Lettice Mainwaring was one of the sort that makes the best of everything.

"It's a long journey over the hills, miss," said the wife of the landlord of the little one-story tavern that was perched on the crest of the highway, "and the snow's powerful deep."

"I think a winter landscape is the prettiest thing in the world," said Lettice, cheerily, as she wound her fur boa round and round her neck.

"And old Stokes' stage is awful uncomfortable," added the landlady.

"I like stage-riding," asserted Letty.

"You'll not get there till dark."

"Oh, that is sooner than I expected."

And Letty climbed up into the stage coach, which stood creaking and groaning at the door, having just rumbled up from the next village, a mile or so down the hill.

One solitary passenger occupied the opposite corner—a tall, dark man, with a Spanish sort of complexion, and clear, dark eyes, who wore an odd sort of olive-green cloak or mantle, heavily trimmed with sable fur. He nodded briefly in return to Letty's smiling recognition. Our little heroine would have talked with a polar bear, had a polar bear chanced to be her traveling companion.

Lettice arranged her furs and her basket and her bonnet strings, and wondered secretly how far the tall man was going.

"Can I be of any assistance to you?" courteously queried the gentleman, as Letty searched in the straw at her feet for a dropped glove.

"Thanks—no," said Letty, coming up again with very red cheeks and curls a little disheveled. "Are you going all the way through?"

"As far as the stage goes—yes."

"Oh," said Miss Mainwaring, "so am I."

The gentleman nodded interrogatively and went back to his paper.

"Cross thing!" thought Letty, involuntarily pouting her cherry lips. "Why can't he talk and make himself agreeable? And he knows very well that we are to be shut up here together for eight long hours."

But the wild, mountainous landscape, as it flitted by, white gleaming with snows and darkly fringed with the waving of hemlock boughs and solemn crested pines, was, after all, nearly as good a study as the "human face divine;" and Letty soon forgot her temporary annoyance and chagrin in the white, skeleton-like walls of a deserted old paper mill long since disused and fallen to ruin.

"I wonder if it is haunted?" said she, aloud.

The stranger smiled and laid down his paper.

"Do you believe in such things?" he asked.

Lettice Mainwaring laughed and colored.

"Of course not; and yet— Are you much acquainted in this region of the country?"

"I have lived hereabouts a good deal."

"Oh! Then, perhaps, you know Easterham hall?"

His face brightened.

"Oh, yes. You are going there?"

"Yes. I am to be governess to the little children," said Letty, making haste to enlighten him as to her true position, in order that he should fully comprehend that she was no elegant young lady coming to the hall to make a visit, but a humble little working bee, who was obliged to toil steadfastly for the daily bread she ate.

"Indeed!" he said.

And Letty was vexed at herself for noticing the polite indifference into which his tone subsided.

"I suppose it is a very fine old place," she went on.

"Very—for those who fancy 'fine old places.' To my taste they are apt to be overrun with rats, full of draughts and picturesquely inconvenient."

"And haunted, perhaps," mischievously put in Lettice, the roguish sparkles coming back to her eyes.

"So far as I know, Easterham hall is free from any supernatural occupants."

"I am sorry for that," said Letty.

He arched his eyebrows.

"You would like to share your room with a ghost or two?"

"No; but I do like a little tinge of romance about the place—something to set it a little above and beyond the level of the commonplace."

He did not answer, and talkative Letty once more set the conversational ball rolling.

"The Easterhams are very rich, I suppose?"

"Yes."

"I never heard of them until last week," said she, musingly; "and now—how strangely things are ordered in this world!—I am going to cast in my lot among them."

"How does that happen?" said the gentleman. He could not very well say less in ordinary politeness, and yet Letty felt triumphantly that she had "drawn him out."

"They wrote to Mme. Moligny, my old teacher, to select a governess qualified to teach two little boys; and madame knew that I wished for a situation, and so here I am. I wonder how they will like me?"

"I hope you will like them," said the gentleman.

"That isn't the question," Letty corrected, imperatively. "Mr. Easterham is a dreadful bear."

"You are acquainted with him?"

"Oh, no; only what I have heard," answered Letty.

"And what may that be?"

"You are a neighbor?" said Letty, doubtfully. "Perhaps I've said too much already."

He laughed with more animation than she had yet seen in his manner.

"Depend upon it, I shall not betray you to Mr. Easterham. So he is a bear? Well, I have thought so sometimes myself."

"But he won't bite me if I am a good girl and do my duty to the little ones; and they tell me they are very nice boys," persisted Lettice.

"They are very like their father, I believe."

"Oh!" said Lettice, laughing, "I can tame young bears; it is only the full-grown specimen with sharp teeth and long claws I am afraid of. Only think," and a demure apprehensive expression came over Letty's round, blooming countenance, "he goes round the house all day long and never says a word to anyone."

"He must be a savage, indeed," observed the gentleman.

"And Miss Electa Easterham, the old-maid aunt who keeps house for him, has quarreled successively with every governess they have had," went on Letty, patting her little foot on the rustling straw on the stage floor, "but she shall not quarrel with me. I won't let her. I am too good-natured and too accustomed to humoring people, especially old ones. Mme. Moligny wrote me word that she disliked young and pretty governesses particularly. Now, I'm not young—not very young, you see."

"No?"

"I was twenty last week," said Letty, solemnly, "and I am not pretty enough to disturb her mind. I am only tolerably decent looking. Now, if madame had selected Olive Dayton, who used to be in the same class with me—she was a regular beauty, with great shady eyes and a complexion all pearls and roses—there would have been danger then."

The stranger began to look interested.

"Tell me more about your school," said he. "I have a sister whom I think of placing in some desirable institution, and I should like to judge whether your Mme. Moligny's would be a good home for her."

Letty's eyes brightened, her cheeks reddened and her little tongue was unloosed at once. Her traveling companion was social and chatty, and the time fleeted swiftly away.

"You are going?" she cried, as at a lonely inn, overshadowed with silver-stemmed birches and funereal spruce woods, a light sleigh, drawn by two milk-white horses, was waiting.

"I have reached the end of my journey," he said, courteously touching his fur cap. "I had intended to keep on to the end of the route, but I see they have sent to meet me here. I wish you every success and happiness in your bear-taming."

And as the sleigh-bells jingled away Letty felt herself flushing deeply.

"I'm afraid I have been talking too much," thought Letty; "but what is a body to do, shut up all day long in a stage-coach with a conversable gentleman?"

And the rest of Miss Mainwaring's journey was just a little tedious.

It was dusk when they arrived at Easterham hall—a snowy, chill dusk which made the glow of lights through scarlet moreen curtains and the coral shine of a great wood fire in a stone paved hall, as seen through the half-open door, most delightful and welcome.

Aunt Electa, a tall, prim old lady, in snowy cap ribbons and a brown satin dress, stood ready to welcome her; and just behind her Letty saw a tall gentleman, with two little boys clinging about him.

"This is my nephew Philip," the old lady said; and Letty felt as if the blood in her veins were turning to fire, as she recognized—her traveling companion of the day.

"Do I look very much like a bear, Miss Mainwaring?" he asked, laughing, as she stood, trembling and tongue-tied, before him. "No, don't color. I promise you to allow myself to become very tamable. And you must not cry, either," as the tears came into Letty's eyes. "There's nothing for you to cry for."

"Why didn't you tell me who you were?" she asked, piteously.

"Because you never asked me."

Letty resolved within herself that she would leave Easterham the very

"DO I LOOK LIKE A BEAR?"

next day. But she didn't keep the resolution.

At the year's end she had neither quarreled with Aunt Electa nor Mr. Easterham, and the little boys thought "Miss Letty" was perfection. So did their father.

"Letty," said he, "the year for which I engaged you is over."

"Yes," she responded, softly.

"Will you stay another year? Will you stay with me always, Letty?"

And so, within the yellow shine of a wedding ring, Letty found herself a prisoner forever at Easterham hall.—Amy Randolph, in N. Y. Ledger.

A POPULAR MISTAKE.

The Bloodhound Is Not so Ferocious as Is Supposed.

One of the loveliest dogs ever bred, one of the gentlest and most loyal, has by some curious misapprehension of his qualities fallen into such disrepute that the legislature of the state of Massachusetts has enacted a statute which makes it a misdemeanor for anyone to keep a dog of this breeding within the commonwealth. This is the bloodhound, which is generally supposed to follow the trail of men, and, catching them, to rend its human victims limb from limb. If this were the characteristic of the dog I should not blame those who have contributed to his disrepute. But as a matter of fact, a well-bred and well-trained bloodhound would no more think of jumping upon and biting his quarry than would a pointer spring upon the pheasant or partridge he had scented. His business is not to kill game, but to find it. I have seen a man-hunt in the hills of Vermont, the only place where the pure English bloodhound is bred, and when the dogs came up with the man they had trailed they only showed delight at their success, and, by their cessation from barking, indicated to the huntsman that they had found their game. I have heard it said that Mrs. Stowe, in her "Uncle Tom's Cabin," did much towards bringing upon the bloodhound his disrepute. To see if this were so I read over Mrs. Stowe's book recently and was surprised to find that she only once alluded to the bloodhounds in all her highly colored narrative, and never a single time brought them on the scene. She had other objects in view without going out of her way to malign a family of dogs. But those who dramatized Mrs. Stowe's story used the bloodhound with great realistic effect, and none of the wandering troupes which have played this drama has been so poor that it has not had a pack of dogs. But I have never known a troupe to have a pack of real bloodhounds. Instead they have mongrels of various kinds, but always mongrels that looked savage and bloodthirsty. The blood hound is not only not savage, but does not look so. On the contrary, he is amiable in disposition and has a singularly dignified and benevolent expression."—Christian Union.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—Frosting: A very nice frosting may be made without eggs as follows: Mix cold water with pulverized sugar to the consistency of a stiff paste. Spread with a silver knife. A very small quantity of water will dissolve a large amount of sugar.—Christian Union.

—Very good dishcloths may be crocheted in plain stitch from the string which comes around bundles. They should be washed and boiled weekly. Old dishtowels, after they become linty, may be doubled over, slightly quilted with the needle, and wear well as dishcloths. Also tablecloths, worn out as such, may renew their youth in the dishpan.

—Quail with Oysters: This is essentially a southern dish. The quail are well rubbed inside and out, with pepper, salt and a little onion juice. A couple of plump oysters are then dipped in melted butter and placed inside each bird. The quail are then baked, being basted every few minutes with melted butter and water—equal parts. The birds are served surrounded by little sticks of puff paste arranged log-cabin fashion, with tiny tufts of parsley thrust between them.—Good Housekeeping.

—Fried Parsnips: Wash parsnips with a brush used for cleaning vegetables. Scrape off the skin, cut off the top and the small end of the root; slice lengthwise, not too thin for frying, parboil in water, and when slightly tender, dip in flour and fry brown in smoking butter. Take great care not to burn and not to break slices. They are apt to stick unless butter is very hot. That is why I say "smoking butter," and I do not mean butter either scorched or burned. Salt should be added to them while cooking in the water.—Home.

—Roast Heart: Prepare the heart for roasting, cut some of the fat off the top, put the heart into boiling water and let it simmer for twenty minutes. Chop the fat very fine, put with it a half pound of stale bread crumbs, a teaspoonful of chopped parsley, a little thin rind of lemon peel chopped fine, some salt, pepper and nutmeg, and one egg to bind the stuffing. Mix well and fill the openings of the heart. Take a piece of linen large enough to cover the top of the heart and sew it round so as to keep in the dressing. Roast from one and a half to two hours, basting often with the drippings. When done, remove the cloth and serve very hot with a rich brown gravy poured over it and currant jelly in the saucetureen.—Housekeeper.

NEW EMBROIDERIES.

They Are in Great Variety and Very Beautiful.

Nainsook and cambric embroideries for trimming cotton dresses are in open designs copying those of the fashionable laces—Genoa point, guipure, etc. They come both in ecru and pure white in matching paterns of four or five different widths. Some have nearly straight edges, with shallow scallops; others are pointed, with each point of three, five or seven scallops; while still others are merely edged with eyelets or loops. Scroll patterns, stars, wheels and compass designs, diamonds, ovals and trellises are favorite "all over" embroideries wide enough to make the entire waist of the gown, or its yoke and sleeves, or else a corselet to be worn over a full gathered corsage. Insertions for belts and collar bands are in all the new designs. Ribbon embroideries with button-hole spaces for drawing ribbons through promise to be even more popular than they were last year, and come in various widths, from that like narrow beading to insertions an inch or two in breadth. Diagonal effects are new in embroidered open stripes, with wheels or stars or blossoms wrought between. For close work the flower-baskets, bow-knots and fluttering ribbons remain favorite patterns. A pretty effect is given by ecru designs on sheer white cottons.

Embroidered dress patterns of white or colored nainsook or Chambery are in small dots, with a border of flowers and knotted ribbons above a wide hem for the skirt, with narrower trimming for the corsage. Sage-green or pale-rose waving stripes of embroidery are very effective on ecru nainsooks, and there are many pretty designs in lilac and in pale-blue on ecru batistes. Combinations of blue with ecru, and lilac with green, are seen in many of the new spring fabrics.—Harper's Bazar.

SHADES OF SILK.

Delicate Colors That Will be in Vogue This Season.

The use of pale, delicate colors and indistinct shades of color, such as characterized the latter part of Louis XVth's reign, is shown in the new silks. There are many wood-colors, varying from the pale brown of oak to the delicate red-brown of the rose-tree. Biscuit and burnt-bread colors are as prominent in the importations of silks as they are in millinery, and the new whites are usually of a creamy tint. Rose-pink promises to be a very popular color. It is shown in the purplish tones of Ophelia pink, as well as in the pure yellow pinks, which are so universally becoming to blonde women with fair complexions. There are few shades, however, more trying than the Ophelia tint, or any of the rose tints that shade into magenta. They give the complexion a ghastly hue, because they are not in harmony with the tints of the skin. Among the coming shades in green are the "cresson" greens and the paler hue of the same color known as "Lily-of-the-Valley." These colors are far more becoming than any of the "paon" tints, which appear again in the "La Cigale" green—a cold, grayish green in blue tones.

Stopping a Leak.

"I do not know if one way of stopping a leak in a saucepan is generally known," says a young housekeeper, "but it struck me as original, and it is certainly very simple and efficacious. I went into the kitchen the other day and saw that my cook, who is French, had something simmering on the fire. As she was pouring it out, I saw a white rag at the bottom of the saucepan. "What is that, Pauline?" I said. "Oh, did madame never see that way of mending a hole?" she explained. "But see, it is very simple," and she pulled out the little piece of linen and showed me quite a large hole in the agate pan. "I put the corner of a bit of linen through so," she went on, "and then I pull it until the fullness is jammed very tight; then with a knife I cut it off on each side and it holds perfectly." "But I should think it would burn," I said. "It never does," said Pauline, "but I don't know why—perhaps because it remains wet!—voila!" —N. Y. Tribune.

A PREFERRED CREDITOR.

He Certainly Did Come In Ahead of the Others.

A good story is going the rounds about a New York merchant who recently failed for a large amount. He called all his creditors together and offered to settle with them for ten cents on the dollar, giving them his notes, payable in thirty days.

As most of the creditors had little hope of getting anything, they eagerly accepted the proposition. One man, however, stood out for better terms, and all efforts to get him to agree were futile. Finally, the bankrupt took him out in the hall and said:

"Ven you come in an' sign mit de udders, den I make you preferred creditor."

"All right," said the kicker, "under those circumstances I will agree to a settlement."

The papers were signed and all the creditors left except the one who had been told he was to be preferred.

"What are you waiting for?" said the man who had failed.

"Why, you said I was to be preferred. I am waiting to know what I am going to get."

"Well, I tell you—you get notings."

"Get nothing? Why, you promised to make me a preferred creditor if I would sign with the rest."

"And so you are. I make you preferred. I tell you now you get notings. De udders wait thirty days before dey know it, and den dey get notings."—Chicago Mail.

Wide Awake for April

Is a veritable Easter number. In its pictures, in its stories, in its poems, the Easter spirit predominates. This April number is quite as acceptable a remembrance at the Easter season as the conventional card or booklet. Meynelle's frontispiece, "Easter Day," Burgess' full-page "Easter Lily," Garrett's stirring crusading picture, are fitting accompaniments to Miss Poulsson's charming verses, "The Flowers' Easter Message," to Miss Barstow's delightful "Story of an Easter Hat," and to Elbridge S. Brooks' spirited Easter Day ballad of crusading days, "Prince Almeric's Amulet." Mrs. Lewis' description of the "Easter-Tree," and the day's festivities in Germany, Miss Amanda B. Harris' delightful story of "How Easter came to the little Nuremberg Maids," and another sketch in the Fair Harvard Series, "The Holy Coat of Treves" by Kenneth McKenzie are timely. Miss Cocke contributes a capital war-time story of Southern life, "The Romance of a Calico Gown;" Tudor Jenks, a characteristic wonder story, "Christopher's 'At Home,'" and Lieut.-Col. Thorndike, a stirring account of a flight "Out of Paris by Balloon." D. Lothrop Co., Boston, Pubs. 20 cents a number, $2.40 a year.

A Back Number.
